CĒRA KINGS OF THE ŚANGAM PERIOD
CĀRA KINGS OF THE ŚANGAM PERIOD

BY

K. G. SESHA AIYAR, B.A., B.L., Ex-Judge of the High Court of Travancore, Member of the Royal Asiatic Society 1906—30.
Member, Mythic Society, Bangalore.
Member, Madura Tamil Śangam.

LUZAC & CO.,
LONDON.
1937
First Published 1937.

8220
To

His Highness Vañci Pāla
Śri Bāla Rāma Varma Kulaśēkhara,
Knight Grand Commander
Of The Most Eminent Order
Of The Indian Empire,
Mahārāja Of Travancore,
Who Worthily Represents
The Ancient And Historic House Of Cēra Kings.

This Book
Is With His Highness's Gracious Permission
Respectfully Dedicated.
PREFACE.

Every student of South Indian history knows that of the three great Tamil kingdoms that flourished in ancient days in South India, the Çōla and Pāṇḍya kingdoms have long ago ceased to exist, while the Cēra kingdom still continues under the rule of its indigenous kings. Prof. K. A. Nilakanta Sastri of the Madras University has in his scholarly works on the Çōlas and the Pāṇḍyas given us the stories of those two royal houses, gathered from authentic sources; but as yet no intelligible account of the ancient Cēra kingdom based on reliable sources has been attempted. In the following pages, I have for the first time, tried to construct that story, so far as it can be recovered from ancient Tamil literature, which is the only available source from which it can be built up.

Tamil literature of the Šangam period is the oldest native source that supplies relevant material for ancient South Indian history; for it is antecedent to the era of dated inscriptions relating to South Indian kings. This important source has now been made available principally by the labours of the greatest living Tamil scholar, Mahāmahōpādhyāya Dr. V. Swaminātha Aiyar,—clarum et venerabile nomen—whose indefatigable energy and selfless work of nearly half-a-century have succeeded, not only in saving from the ravages of white ants almost the whole range of the Sangam classics which had existed only in the form of fast-decaying palm-leaf manuscripts in remote corners of the southern peninsula, but also in bringing out critical editions of those priceless literary treasures. It is no exaggeration to say that it is impossible to repay the debt which the students of Tamil India owe to the venerable and learned Mahāmahāpādhyāya, by whose great work alone it has become possible to recover the outlines of the lost history of ancient South India, and to gain some knowledge of the state of civilization, the social, literary, and political life, and the religious ideas of the Tamil people in the early centuries of the Christian era.

Almost the first to recognise and demonstrate the supreme value of ancient Tamil literature in the construction of early South Indian history was my friend Dewan Bahadur Dr. S. Krishnaswamy Aiyangar, who worthily filled the chair of Ancient Indian History and Archaeology for many years in the Madras University, and by his numerous writings and his able direction of historical research in the post-graduate courses in the University has, as Sir Jadunath Sarkar, the well-known Indian historian, once said, founded the Madras School of Indian History. At a time when archaeology and epigraphy alone were regarded as supplying relevant material for purposes of history, he emphasised that for satisfactory historical research, close study of ancient literature was also of prime importance; and by the systematic use in his works of material supplied by ancient Tamil classics, he successfully paved the way for succeeding workers in the field of ancient South Indian history. To-day Sangam literature is freely acknowledged by all to be an indispensable, and in some cases, the only source of historical information in regard to the early Tamil kingdoms.

The material for the present work has been entirely gathered from the Sangam works. One of them, Patiṟṟup-pattu, relates exclusively to the Cēras, and several other Sangam works are in some way or other connected with the Cēra kingdom and Cēra royalty. My object has been to draw as clearly as possible, from Sangam literature alone, the outlines of the story of the early Cēra kings and their achievements. Ancient South India had no Herodotus or Thucydides, Livy or Tacitus. Its literature, however, abounds in materials from which a careful student can build up a reliable story of the social and religious life of the people and their progress in arts, sciences and literature. Patiṟṟup-pattu gives a dynastic list of Cēra kings, with the length of the different reigns and the outstanding events of each reign; and though chronology as such is absent, and there is an entire absence of dated inscriptions, it is not impossible to construct a sort of chronological framework for the period with which this book deals. I have attempted to construct such a framework; and though I do not claim for it absolute accuracy, I venture to think it will not be found unreasonable or wholly unacceptable.

The book has grown out of lectures originally delivered in Trivandrum and published in Indian historical journals; and my thanks are due to the editors of those journals who readily agreed to the use of the articles for this book. It is my duty and it gives me pleasure to acknowledge my indebtedness to Mahāmahōpādhyāya Dr. V. Swaminatha Aiyar, the learned editor of the Śangam classics from which I have drawn my materials. To Mr. V. R. Ramachandra Dikshitar, M.A., Lecturer in Indian History in the University of Madras, I am particularly under obligation for his valuable suggestions and his untiring service in seeing the work through the press with scrupulous care. My sincere thanks are also due to Mr. T. V. Mahalingam, M.A., who gladly undertook the preparation of the Index and Bibliography.

Trivandrum, K. G. Sesha Aiyar.
15th January 1937.
CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>S. 1</th>
<th>Sources and Their Nature</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>S. 2</td>
<td>Udiyan Čēralātan, the first Čēra King</td>
<td>1-4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 3</td>
<td>Imayavaramban Neđum-Čēralātan</td>
<td>4-10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 4</td>
<td>Palyānai Šel-kuḷu Kuṭṭuvan.</td>
<td>10-14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 5</td>
<td>Nārmūdic-Cēral</td>
<td>14-17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 6</td>
<td>Šen-Kuṭṭuvan</td>
<td>17-21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 7</td>
<td>Āḍu-kōṭpāṭtuc-Cēralātan</td>
<td>21-27</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER II

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>S. 1</th>
<th>Karuvūr-ēriya Kō-Perum-Cēral Īrupporai</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>S. 2</td>
<td>Antuvan Cēral</td>
<td>33-35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 3</td>
<td>Šelvak-Kaḍunkō-Vāliyātan</td>
<td>36-38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 4</td>
<td>Perum-Cēral Īrumporai</td>
<td>38-41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 5</td>
<td>Īlam-Cēral Īrumporai</td>
<td>41-44</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER III

Examination of Results | 47-52 |

CHAPTER IV

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>S. 1</th>
<th>Kuṭṭuvan Kōdai</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>S. 2</td>
<td>Īlam-Kuṭṭuvan</td>
<td>53-55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 3</td>
<td>Pālaipādiya-Perum-Kaḍumko</td>
<td>55-56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 4</td>
<td>Mā-veṅkō</td>
<td>56-60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>60-61</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS.

CHAPTER V

S. 1. Yānaik-kaṭ-Śey Māntaram Cēral 62—66
S. 2. Kōk-Kōdai Mārbān 66—67
S. 3. Kaṇaikkāl Irumpoṛai 67—70
S. 4. Rule of Succession 71—75
S. 5. A Strange View of Patirṛup-pattu 76—77
S. 6. Kēralōtpatti 77—79

CHAPTER VI

Vaṇcil-Mūṭūr—

S. 1. 80—85
S. 2. 85—89
S. 3. 89—92
S. 4. 92—96

CHAPTER VII

The Date of the Šangam Epoch—

S. 1. 97—99
S. 2. The Ninth or Tenth Century Theory 99—100
S. 3. The Seventh or Eighth Century Theory 100—109
S. 4. The Fifth Century Theory 109—111
S. 5. The Second Century Theory 112—119
S. 6. Conclusion 119—122

CHAPTER VIII

Chronology of the Šangam Cēras 123—131
CONTENTS

CHAPTER IX

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Political, Social and Religious Background—</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>S. 1</td>
<td>132–136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 2</td>
<td>137–140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 3</td>
<td>140–142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 4</td>
<td>142–146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 5</td>
<td>146–152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. 6</td>
<td>152–156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bibliography</td>
<td>157–159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Index</td>
<td>161–183</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
ABBREVIATIONS EMPLOYED AND THEIR EXPLANATION.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Abbreviation</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Agam</td>
<td>Aga-Nānūru</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ain</td>
<td>Ain-Kuru-Nūru</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I.H.Q.</td>
<td>Indian Historical Quarterly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J.I.H.</td>
<td>Journal of Indian History</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J.O.R.</td>
<td>Journal of Oriental Research</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kurun</td>
<td>Kuruntokai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mani</td>
<td>Manimēkai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marutam</td>
<td>Kalit-tokai; Marutak-kali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mullai</td>
<td>Mullai-kali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Naṛ</td>
<td>Naṛrinai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Neytal</td>
<td>Kalit-tokai; Neytal-Kali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pālai</td>
<td>Kalit-tokai; Pālaik-Kali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>P.p.</td>
<td>Patiṟṟup-pattu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Puram</td>
<td>Puṟa-Nānūru</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Q.J.M.S.</td>
<td>Quarterly Journal of the Mythic Society</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silap.</td>
<td>Śilappadhikāram</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tol.</td>
<td>Tol-Kāppiyam</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CHAPTER I.

S. 1. Sources and Their Nature.

The only source from which the story of the old Cēra Kingdom can be constructed is the literature of the Šangam period, for that story is unknown to epigraphy; but even Šangam literature can help us only to prepare an outline which at best can be treated merely as tentative in regard to the results that it may disclose. Of the Šangam works, the most important for the present purpose are Pūra-nānūru, Patirr̥up-pattu, and Šilappadhikāram. Pūra-nānūru is a collection of 400 lyrics by different poets, numbering about 160; and the collection derives its name from the circumstance that the lyrics therein relate to puram, one of the two fundamental categories of poetic material according to the ancient rules of Tamil poetics and rhetoric. Puram or Purap-porul is concerned with the external relations of princes, which embrace war and politics. Though these are generally court lyrics, panegerizing in the main a king or a chieftain of the ancient Tamil land, they are usually direct and natural in language and sentiment and free from the exaggerated artificiality of later poetry; and most poems are by singers who are contemporaries of the personages sung about. One can easily see that for purposes of history, the lyrics of the Pūra-nānūru collection must be of supreme value. Patirr̥up-pattu is a collection of poems dealing exclusively with the wars and other achievements, including those in the act of peace, of Cēra kings. As the name implies, there were ten poems, each consisting of a decad of lyrics; but of these, two have not till now been discovered—the first and the tenth. Each one of the existing eight decades deals with the achievements and merits of a separate Cēra king, and the author of each decad is a contemporary of the hero of his song. It is, therefore, obvious that for an account of the early Cēras, Patirrup-pattu is of incalculable value. Śilappadhikāram is the first regular epic in the Tamil language, and it is indispensable for a knowledge of the early Cēra Kingdom, as its real hero is a Cēra monarch, Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, and its author a Cēra prince.

Besides, from Āganānūru and Narriṇai also, which are well-known Šangam collections of poems relating to agam or love, we derive some help in building up our story. I regard all these sources as of the nature of contemporary documents in respect of the kings of whom they speak. They are poetic accounts of the achievements of princes, who according to the conception of those early times were worthy of being extolled as high examples. The conception of biography as a faithful portrait of a man’s life is entirely modern; but that circumstance cannot detract from the value of these poems as sources of authentic history; and I have unhesitatingly utilized them in constructing my narrative.
In this connection, it may be mentioned that the information supplied by the author of each Patirṟup-pattu is sometimes found amplified or augmented in the Patigam or epilogue appended to it; and there can be no doubt that the Patigam was added later by some one other than the author of the poem. So too, for a correct assessment of the historical value of the information conveyed by the lyrics of the Puṟa-nānūṟu collection, we have to rely on the colophons appended to them; and there is no means of knowing when and by whom these colophons were appended to the poems. There cannot, however, be any doubt about the antiquity of the patigams and the colophons; and it is rational to hold that their authors gave fixity to the ancient traditions of the Tamil country current in their day.

Tradition is really human testimony regarding the long past; and though like all human testimony it is liable to error, it should not on that account be discarded as wholly unworthy of attention, unless, indeed, we hold that in ancient times people were incapable of discriminating between truth and falsehood. Tradition is, in effect, reputation arising from the concurrence of many parties unconnected with each other, but all interested in investigating the subject; and in the absence of trustworthy first-hand evidence, tradition may and ought to be accepted as the groundwork for history, especially in matters where the probability for personal bias is little. In this view, I see no reason to doubt the correctness of the information conveyed by the patigams and the colophons, and I have accepted the veracity of these very ancient documents which the Tamil world has never thought of questioning for long centuries, even since they were written by persons who could have had no personal bias whatever.

S. 2. Udiyan Ceralatan, the first Cera King.

The extant sections of Patiyup-pattu deal with the achievements of eight Cera kings, and they are:

Imayavaramban Nedum-Ceralatan,
Pal-yanai Sel-Kelu-Kuttuvan, Kalanki-kanni-Narmudic-Ceral, Kadal-Pirakotiya Sen-Kuttuvan,
Adu-kotpattuc-Ceralatan,
Selvak-kadunko-Valiyatan, Takadur-erinta Perum-Ceral Irumporai, and KudakkO I lam-Ceral-Irumporai.

For the names of the Cera kings celebrated in the Purana-nunuru lyrics, we have to depend on the colophon appended to each lyric of that collection. From the colophons, we gather the names of seventeen Cera kings; and they are:

Ceraman Perum-SorrU Udiyan Ceralatan,
Ceraman Karuvur-eriya Olval Kop-perum-Ceral
Irumporai,
Ceraman Kadunko Valiyatan, Ceraman Palaipadiya Perum Kadunko, Ceraman Antuvan Ceral Irumporai, Cēramān Yānaikkat Ṣey Māntaram-Cēral-Irumpōrai, Cēramān Kōk-Kōdai Mārbān, Cēramān Takadūrerinta Perum-Cēral Irumpōrai, Cēramān Kuṭṭuvan Kōdai, Cēramān Kuḍakkō Neḍum-Cēralātan, Cēramān Perum-Cēralātan,
Cēramān Kanaiikkāl Irumpōrai,
Cēramān Kuḍakkō Cēral-Irumpōrai,
Cēramān Kōṭṭambalattut-tuṅciya Māk-kōdai, Cēramān Vaṅcan,
Cēramān Kaḍalōṭṭiya Vēl-ken Kuṭṭuvan, and Cēramān Mā-Ven Kō.

As we can see easily, some of these names are re-duplications. It will be my attempt in the following pages to arrange these Cēras in their chronological order, ascertain their approximate dates and show by what deeds or achievements their names live in literature. Perhaps in the discussion, it will be possible to relate these kings to one another and to get a glimpse of the social, religious and political life of the people in the Cēra country in those distant days.

For the earliest Cēra known to Tamil literature, we have to go to Puranānūru. He is Cēramān Perum-Ṣorṛu Udiyan Cēralātan, who is celebrated in song by Muraṅciyir Muḍi-nāgarāyar in Puram 2. That lyric, which, if we except some possible references to him in Aga-nānūru, is the only poem sung in his honour, is given in translation below.

Hail, noble king! whose nature well combines
The qualities of all the elements;
Whose long forgiving suff'ring is a match
To mother earth's; whose judgment wise is wide
As all-pervading ether, and whose might Like air illimitable, and like fire Resistless, with refreshful mercy still Is tempered, which thy glorious sway upholds,
As water cool enlivens nature's face.
Hail, warrior-king! Thy land, with plenty smiles,
With untold wealth the deep sea's bosom yields,
And treasures new that ceaseless to thy ports
From foreign lands rich merchant vessels bring.
The sun, that in thy eastern sea is born,
In thy foam-crested western ocean seeks
His rest at eve. Sky bounds thy land alone!
Majestic monarch! When the ten times ten Kaurava's, crowned with golden tumboi wreaths,
Wrathful in battle 'gainst the heroes five—
Lords of the fiery steeds with tossing mane—
Their patrimony lusting after, fought,
Thou didst unstinted savoury food supply
To either host, till all the Kurus fell.
Illustrious king! though luscious milk may sour,
The sun his brilliance lose, and e'en the four Vedas themselves their holy teachings change,
Mayst thou by ministers be served, whose love
For thee and wisdom in thy councils shall Constant through all vicissitudes remain!
Mayst thou in power and glory steadfast shine
Throughout all time like Potiya's sacred mount
And golden-peaked Himalaya, where rest
The dainty headed fawn and large-eyed deer
Securely by the holy triple fire
Which for their ev'ning rites the sages raise!

In this translation, I have followed the ancient commentator of Puranāṇarū, who makes out that this Cēra king was a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavās and the Kauravās, and in the great battle of Kurukṣetra, he supplied the rival armies with food. The Šilappadhikāram also seems to favour the view that there was a Cēra king who supplied food to the rival hosts at Kurukṣetra.¹ The words of the lyric need not, it seems to me, be taken to refer to him. Perhaps the king celebrated in this poem gave a memorial offering to the spirits at the anniversary of the Mahābhārata War, in which the heroes from whom he traced his descent, had died; and that is probably what the poet refers to. This seems to be supported by a lyric by Māmūlanār (Agam 233) where we read:

\[\text{இந்துக்கை வால்ல்முன்னிகு பொக்கிப்பெற்ற பாப்பங்கைதிற்பு வருற்றிய அல்லது போர்த்தூர் ஜார்பங்கை செர்பநகர்} and Pandit R. Raghava Iyengar of Rāmnād also seems to hold that view.²

Udiyan Cēral was obviously famous for his lavish hospitality; and his kitchen has become a bye-word for sumptuous feeding. Thus Kōṭṭambalattuṇciya Cēramān has in Agam 168:

\[\text{கோட்டாமலபல்லுண்ணையா செரமன் வருயில்லுண்ணம்பார்}

This Cēramān who is stated to have died at Kōṭṭambalam is, perhaps, identical with

¹ Šilap. Vālittuk-kādai-ūsalvari, 1.
Kōṭṭambalattut-tuñciya Māk-kōdai, the author of Ēruam 245, of whom we shall hear more, later on. He tells us in this lyric that Udiyan’s royal kitchen was at Kūḷumūr, perhaps Ptolemy’s Kourellour, a place, so far as I can see, situated possibly in North Travancore. I suggest that it is very probably the place now known as Kumuli, near the source of the Periyar river, in the Devikōlam Division of Travancore. Kūḷumūr may, by metathesis, easily become Kumuli, just as Musiri, the seaport of the Ėra Kingdom so famous in Šangam literature, appears as Murasi in Sanskrit works. We cannot say whether Kūḷumūr was the original capital of the Cēras, taking for the present that Kūḷumūr is a proper noun denoting a place; possibly it was; but we can only say that Tamil tradition does not appear to have known a time when the Ėra capital was not Vañci. We see from Aga-nānūru that Udiyan Cēral extended his kingdom by his conquests. Māmūlanār refers to him in Agam 65 as:

Kaṟṟēṟṟumāṟṟu Ėṟṟum Ėṟṟum

that is, Udiyan Cēral who conquered others’ territories and annexed them to his own.

In Ēruam 2, Udiyan Cēral is called Vānaṉavaramban, and this term means ‘one whose kingdom is bounded by the sky’ or as explained in the Ėṟṟumāṉi Nighāṇdu, ‘by the sea’. It has been suggested that, perhaps the form of the word was originally Vānaṉaṉ-arban, which reminds one of Asoka’s Dēvānām-priya; but it seems to me that the suggestion is far-fetched. Pāṇini explains Dēvānām-priya as meaning ‘an obstinate fool’. It appears that in Vēdic and allied Sanskrit literature, Dēvānām-priya is employed as a term of reproach to denote a heretic. For another liberty taken with the name of this Cēra king, some Malayalam scholars of to-day are responsible; for the grotesque transformation of the name Vāna-Varamban Udiyan Cēral into Udayan Bāna Varman is their leger-demain. Vānavaramban is a descriptive epithet, having reference to his extensive territory and conquests or his maritime kingdom. If, as we see from Aga-nānūru, he was great in war, he was also great in the arts of peace. Trade and commerce flourished in the land and foreign merchantmen called at its ports. He was a munificent patron of letters, as we see from the same Agam, where we read:

[Udiyan Cēral may be regarded as the founder of the Cēra dynasty of the Śangam period. Having regard to the scheme of 3 Vide Śri Śankaracharya’s Madras Discourses. pp. 147—163. See also V. R. R. Dikshitar, The Mauryan Polity, p. 291 where reference is made to other kings bearing that title.

4 Agam 65.
arrangement adopted in Patirrup-pattu, there can be no doubt that he was the hero of the first decad of that collection, which is now unfortunately missing; for we find from the Patigam of second Patirrup-pattu that Udiyan Cēral was the father of Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan, the hero of that decad. From the same source we learn that Udiyan Cēral had married Nallini, the daughter of Veļiyan Vēñmān, afterwards known as Cōlān Pörvaikkō-Perunārkillī, whose father Tittan was, perhaps, the earliest of the Cōla kings who ruled at Uraiyyūr. It is interesting to note that, among the names by which the Āra is known, the Nighanḍus mention Udiyan and Vāna-varamban, the names that this king bore. It may be permissible to suggest that, perhaps, Udiyan-pērūr, the Diamper of the Christians, which is on the northern boundary line of Travancore, was founded by him.

S. 3. Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan.

We may now follow the lead of Patirrup-pattu. The hero of the second decad of that work is Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan, the son of Udiyan Cēral by Veļiyan’s daughter Nallini. Imayavarambān was a great warrior, and he extended his kingdom to the north. He is said to have conquered seven kings and annexed their territories to his kingdom; and he is praised as having set or imprinted his how on the slope of the Himalayas,⁶ so that his prowess was known, in the words of his panegyrist, from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. Among his successful wars were those against the ‘Kăḍambu’ clan.⁷ The territory of the ‘kăḍambu’ clan, the clan that had the Kăḍambu (Adina cordifolia) as its totem or guardian tree, is the territory of the Nānans, the ‘gold producing Konkanam’ of ancient Tamil literature;⁸ and the Cēras seem to have had several wars with this tribe, which apparently was a source of harassment on the border. The description in Patirrup-pattu 12 shows that Imayavaramban’s victory over the Kăḍambas was an event of supreme importance; for the poet compares Imayavaramban’s victory to that of the War-God Subrahmanya over Sūra-Padma.⁹ It was obviously first among the outstanding events of his reign; for in references to him, prominent mention is frequently made to his victory over the Kăḍambas.¹⁰ In Patirrup-pattu 20 the poet propounds the question: “Do you ask me who is my king?” and gives the proud answer:—“He is the invincible Neḍum-Cēralātan who utterly destroyed the Kăḍambu”. In praising

⁶ Agam 127.
⁷ Patirrup-pattu 11, 12, 20; also Agam 127, 347.
⁸ Naṟ. 391; Agam 173.
⁹ Patirrup-pattu 11.
¹⁰ Ibid., 12 and 20.
the ancestry of Iļam-Cēral Irumporai, Perum-Kunṭur Kilār acclaims him\(^{11}\) as—

Māmūlar in Agam 127, begins the narration of this Cēra’s great achievements with his conquest of the Kaḍamba country:

It is difficult to say whether these Kaḍambas were the stock from which the Banavasi Kaḍambas came; perhaps they were. A view has gained ground among some scholars that the Kaḍambu clan were pirates,\(^{12}\) and Ptolemy’s phrase Ariake andron peiraton has at least in part been responsible for it. The latter words, as was pointed out by a recent writer may be regarded as a corruption of Andrabhṛtya; but I am inclined to think that the view therein expressed, that the Kaḍambas were not a piratical people at all, cannot be maintained, in view of the language of the opening lines of Patirṛup-pattu \(^{11}\) and expressions like—that Māmūlar employs.

\(^{11}\) Patirṛup-pattu, 87.

\(^{12}\) Vide Dr. Krishnaswami Aiyangar’s Beginnings of South Indian History, p. 232.
This Cēra is also said to have won a victory over the Yavanas. There is no means of knowing where exactly the colony of the Yavanas was or who exactly they were. The term Yavana has been taken to denote the Greeks; but I am not sure if it did not originally denote the Javanese or the Arabs; and it is noteworthy that Ptolemy makes no mention of a Greek colony. The punishment meted out to the Yavanas by Imayavaramban is singular. Their arms are said to have been pinioned behind their back, and ghī poured on their head.

In Agam 127, Māmūlar also tells us of his conquest of Māntai which not improbably is the Mandagara of the Periplus.

Obviously the land of the Cēra was a rich and flourishing country. Among jewels worn in the land were those made of flashing gems set in gold. Besides rice, meat was also used as food; and drinking palm wine was prevalent. There was no limit to the bounty of this great Cēra who was as liberal as Akkūran himself, one of the reputed seven first Vāllals of Tamil tradition. In the words of the poet:

13 For the latest discussion on the identification of the Yavanas, see J.I.H., Vol. XIV, Pt. I.
14 Patiru-pattu 16.
15 & 15a Ibid., 18.
"The rains may fail; but never the munificence of Cēralātan". And indeed, the poet may well be acquitted of exaggeration, when we remember that, according to the colophon, he was, for composing the second decad of Patirrup-pattu, rewarded with the free gift of 500 villages in Umbark-kāḍu (literally elephant-forest), perhaps the region about the Anaimalai in North-West Travancore, and the revenue for thirty-eight years from the southern province of the kingdom. It is interesting to note that there is still, a house bearing the name of Umbarkkāḍu-vīḍu in Vaikam in North Travancore. He is praised as a man of his word; and his life was dedicated to acts of bounty and beneficence. Even in seasons of drought, he could not bear to see any one suffer from hunger.\(^{16}\) He made rich donations and presents of jewels to temples; and he shone like Viṣṇu himself.\(^{17}\) We learn that silk, diamond and gold ornaments were in use in the land.\(^{18}\) He is said to have reigned for fifty-eight years. In regard to his name also, some Malayalam scholars have taken undue liberty and transformed Imayavaramban into Imaya Varman!

Next in order comes Pal-yānai Sel-Kelu-Kuṭṭuvan, brother of Imayavaramban.\(^{19}\)

---

\(^{16}\) Patirrup-pattu, 20.

\(^{17}\) Ibid., 15.

His capital stood on the banks of the broad Periyār, and near the sounding ocean. He was also a great warrior and made extensive conquests, among which the conquest of Konkar-Nādu is specifically mentioned. He was the lord of Pūli-Nādu and the Cerupputmountains as well as of the Aiyirai-Malai—probably the same as Aiyitai-Malai in Central Travancore near the source of the Periyār—and the region of the Periyār which even in times of protracted drought, when the falls in the hills have gone dry, is rich in water! In the early years of his reign, he seems to have been a fierce warrior; and it is significant that out of the ten lyrics in Patirrup-pattu III, as many as seven praise his irresistible prowess in war. He is eulogized as Kuṭṭuvan, "the ever victorious lord of vast armies and the protective armour of fierce-eyed warriors. The march of his army into the territories of his foes meant the utter devastation of those lands and their conversion into deserts infested by robbers. But a great change came over the spirit of his dream in later years; and like 20 Patirrup-pattu, 28.

21 Ibid., 21.
22 Ibid., 23.
23 Ibid., 22.
24 Ibid., 21.
25 Ibid., 28.
26 Ibid., 21, 22 and 24.
27 Ibid., 24, 25 and 26.
Aśoka after his war in Kalinga, Pal-yanai Śēl-Kelu-Kuṭţuvan turned away from war and carnage, and came under the influence of the spirit. As a warrior he used to worship Koṛravai, to whom he made elaborate sacrifice when starting for war; but afterwards he followed the law of the Brahmanas; who daily performed their six-fold functions, and accepted Neḻumbāratāyanār as his preceptor. He helped the Brahmana poet Pālai Gautamanār, the author of Patiṟṟup-pattu III, to perform ten Yāgas. He never swerved from his word, but kept straight on even like the sun. He was a patron of letters, and all branches of learning, both religious and secular, throve in the land. His kingdom was so rich and prosperous, that his unstinted liberality did not affect in any manner the wealth of the country. He duly performed Dēvayajña and Atithiyajña, and acquired merit and greatness, ‘vaster in extent than even the five elements’ and apparently came to deserve the name of Dharmaputra. 'After a reign of twenty-five 28 Patiṟṟup-pattu, 30.

29 Ibid., 24.
30 Patigam Patiṟṟup-pattu, III.
31 Patiṟṟup-pattu 21.
31a Ibid., 21.
32 Ibid., 21.
33 Ibid., 24.
34 Puram 366.
years he followed the example of his preceptor and became an anchoret, after dividing his kingdom among his kindred. 35

Pal-yānai Śel-Kelu Kuṭṭuvan was succeeded by Kaḷankāik-kaṇṇi Nārмуḍiccēral, son of Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan. Nārмуḍiccēral is the hero of the 4th decade of Patirrup-pattu of which Kaṭpiyāṟṟu Kaṭpiyanyaṅar is the author. Though he was a great warrior, he treated his enemies with great clemency and magnanimity; a circumstance that the author of IV Patirrup-pattu particularly mentions with admiration:

We shall be able to appreciate the full significance of this praise when we remember that in those early days the victors in the field of battle are said to have pulled out the teeth of their enemies, and exposed them to public view at the gates of their capital. 36 The most important of the expeditions of this Cēra were those against Neḍumuḍal or Aṇci, 37 and Nannan 38 both of whom he defeated in battle. Aṇci was perhaps a predecessor of Auvai’s friend who is known in literature as Atiyamān.

35 Patirrup-pattu III, Patigam.
36 Agam 211; Nar. 18.
37 Patirrup-pattu 32.
38 Ibid., 40.
Nedumān Āñci; if so, he must have been an Atiyamān, and the chief of Kutiramalai with his head-quarters at Takaḍûr, now in Mysore. I suggest Atiyamān is the Satiyaputra of Aśoka's inscription. The initial a becomes ha, which again becomes sa in prakrit; and mān is abbreviation for magan which means putra; and thus Atiyamān becomes Satiya-putra on the analogy of Cēramān equals Kērala-putra. I know other identifications of Satiyaputra have been suggested; but so far, as I remember, previous writers have, consciously or unconsciously, read the name in the Edict as Satiyaputra, including even the latest writer on the subject, Mr. V. R. Ramachandra Dikshitar, who has contributed to the Indian Culture an article on "Who are Satiyputras"? The word is not Satiyaputra but Satiyaputra; and no attempt has been made before to explain the presence of i in the name. The identification here suggested of Atiyamān with Satiyaputra satisfactorily accounts for the presence of the particle i in the name appearing in Aśoka's Edict. Atiyamān's territory will exactly occupy the place where, having regard to the order in which the principalities or kingdoms of South India are mentioned in Aśoka’s Edict, Satiyaputra’s territory may be expected to be situate. The Atyamāns were an independent line of chiefs till they were subdued by the Cēra, whose vassal they ultimately became. Nannan, as has already been stated, was the chief of Pūli and the head of the Kaḷambu clan. This Nannan appears to have recovered some of his lost territory; and Nārmuḍiccēral advanced against the insurgent chief and won a decisive victory over him at Vāgaipperunturai, wrested back the territory and subjugated the clan. Nannan became thereafter a vassal or feudatory of the Cēra. Thus in Agam 258, Paraṇar refers to him as Nannan Udiyan, and in Agam 44 he is referred to as one of the feudatory generals of the Cēra. We may, therefore, hold that some time after the crushing defeat at Vāgaipperunturai, Nannan became the ally and supporter of the Cēra, whom he recognised as his overlord.

39 Agam 32.

39a Some scholars identify this with Dharmapuri in Salem District.

39b Vol. I, Pt. III, Mr. Govinda Pai in his paper on Satiyaputra in Krishnasawmi Aiyangar Commemoration Volume (pp. 33—47) gives the following involved equation: Śāntika (S. Kanara)—Śāntika—Śāmtika—Śātika—Śātiya=Satiya.

Nārmuḍiccēral was apparently an ideal monarch; and Kāppiyāṟṟu Kāppiyanār, who has sung the fourth decad of Patirṟṟup-pattu in his honour, tells us that the king lived for the good of others; the poet’s words being: śrīmātrō prāśām evāmena. He freely gave away elephants as 40 Vide also Patirṟṟup-pattu III Patigam.

41 Agam 119.
42 Patirṟṟup-pattu, 38; 39.
Among the shrines in his kingdom, prominent mention is made of the shrine of Sūrāpati. And the old scholiast explains this to mean the deity in Tiruvanantapuram (i.e. Trivandrum). This explanation is probably correct. In Agam 359, Māmūlar has ȧṣṭa-pāt that means ‘like ȧṣṭa-pāt of Vāna Varamban’. This would show that in Māmūlar’s time Veḷiyattu or Veḷiyam was in the Cēra Kingdom. Veḷiyam is most probably the modern Vilīncam, a coast town some miles south of Trivandrum, where in later years a well-known naval battle was fought. Balita, which appears to be a corruption of Veḷiyattu, is said in the Periplus to be in the Cōla Kingdom; but that probably is a misdescription. We may, therefore, hold, in the state of our present knowledge, that in this Cēra’s reign his kingdom embraced Trivandrum in the south, as the commentator indicates. This monarch is also called Vānavaramban, possibly because in his reign had been attained the ideal of peace and safety graphically described in Puram 2, as having existed in the land in the days of Udiyan Cēral, the first to bear the title of Vānavaramban. He was, like his predecessors, a liberal patron of letters; and we learn from the colophon that the author of the fourth decade of Patirrup-pattu was given forty lakhs of gold coins in appreciation of his poem. Nārmudiccēral reigned, according to the colophon, for twenty-five years.

43 Patirrup-pattu, 40.
44 Ibid., 31.

S. 6. Śen-Kuṭṭuvan.

The next in order in the main line is Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, stated to be another son of Imayavaramban. Śen-Kuṭṭuvan’s name is, perhaps the best known among the Cēra Kings to the ordinary student of Tamil literature. He is the hero of the fifth decad of Patīṟṟup-pattu, of which the author is Paraṇar, one of the greatest poets of the Śangam age. He is also the real hero of Silappadhikāram, the well-known Tamil epic by the Cēra prince Iḷankō Aṭikaḷ, though there are some who, it seems to me, needlessly entertain doubts about it. He was a great warrior, and with his victorious army he is said to have conquered vast regions from Cape Comorin in the South to the Himalayas in the North “where the gods dwell”:

He was always in front in the field of battle, leading his army; and his soldiers used shields made of tough bull-hide which effectively protected them from the darts of 46 Patīṟṟup-pattu, 43.

their enemies. Early in his reign, there seem to have been disturbances on the borders of his kingdom, which had to be quelled. Among the chiefs that he subjugated was Mōgur-Manannan, a proud warrior well-known in ancient Tamil literature. His name was Paḷaiyan, and his totem was the neem tree, which shows he was feudatory of the Pāṇḍya. One of the Cēra’s principal allies was ‘Arugai, an enemy of the Chief of Mōgur. Paḷaiyan went to war against Arugai, who sought Šen-Kuṭṭuvan’s help; and in that war the lord of Mōgur, though he was assisted by other reigning princes and chieftains, was utterly defeated by the great Cēra. Šen-Kuṭṭuvan also waged a successful war against the Kongar. He won a great naval victory by reason of which there came to be attached to his name the distinctive great naval victory by reason of which there epithet Kaḍal-Pirakkōṭṭiya, which means, ‘who destroyed the efficacy of the sea as a refuge’. It was apparently one of the most decisive naval victories in Cēra history, and Šen-Kuṭṭuvan falsified by that achievement the 47 Patirrup-pattu, 45.

48 Ibid., 44 and 49.
49 Ibid., 49; V Patigam and Šilap. XXVIII, 124-6.
50 Ibid., 44.
51 Ibid., 49.
52 Šilap. XXV, 152-5.
53 Patirrup-pattu 45, 46, 48; Agam 212.
54 Ibid., V Patigam.
55 Ibid., 45.
popular belief that an island enemy was unassailable and invincible.\textsuperscript{56} I consider that it was by this naval victory that Muširi was made a safe port of call; for we know that in Pliny’s days, (c. 80 A.C.) pirates were a constant source of danger in those waters, and in Kuṭṭuva’s days \textit{Yavana} ships called in large numbers at the port of Muširi and in exchange for gold took back with them cargoes of pepper and other products.\textsuperscript{57} The irrepressible Nannan again rose in revolt; but Šen-Kuṭṭuvan put down the disturbance and destroyed Viyalūr, one of Nannan’s strongholds,\textsuperscript{58} and Koḍukūr, possibly another of Nannan’s strongholds.\textsuperscript{59} According to \textit{Śilappadhiṇikaṟṟam}, Nannan was helped in this war by the Cōla and the Pāṇḍya.\textsuperscript{60} As trophy of his success against the kings and chieftains he had vanquished, he wore on his breast as a personal ornament the crest jewels of seven ruling princes.\textsuperscript{61}

After the destruction of Viyalūr, Šen-Kuṭṭuvaṉ turned his attention to the Cōla country where a war of succession had broken out after the death of Karikāla. We find that nine princes contested the right of Perum-Killi afterwards \textsuperscript{56} \textit{Patirṟup-pattu}, 45.

\textsuperscript{57} \textit{Agam}, 149.
\textsuperscript{58} \textit{Patirṟup-pattu}, \textit{V Patigam} and \textit{Agam}, 97.
\textsuperscript{59} \textit{Ibid.}, \textit{V Patigam}.
\textsuperscript{60} \textit{Śilap.}, XXV, 153-5.
\textsuperscript{61} \textit{Patirṟup-pattu}, 45 and \textit{Śilap.}, XXVIII, 169.
known as Nalam-Killi Śēt-Cenni, the lawful claimant, who is said to be the brother-in-law of Šen-Kuṭṭuvan. Šen-Kuṭṭuvan went to his help, defeated his rivals at Nērivāyil, and placed him securely on the throne. We also learn that this Cēra undertook an expedition to North India for consigning the remains of his deceased mother to the holy waters of the Ganges, when he met Aryan princes in battle and defeated them. Later too, he led an expedition to the Gangetic region for fetching suitable stone from that hallowed ground for the effigy of Kaṅṇaki, the apotheosised wife or Pattini-Kaḍavul, which he intended to consecrate in a temple that he proposed to build. He had received a request from his friend the Śātakarni for assistance, and he took advantage of it. The story of this northern march is not found in Patirrūp-pattu. It must have taken place some time after Paraṇar’s poem had been composed and possibly after Paraṇar’s death. It is, however found in Śilappadhikāram; and I see no reason to reject it. I have shown elsewhere that there is no historical improbability in it; and the learned writer on Ancient India in the Cambridge Shorter History of India states there 62 Patirrūp-pattu, V Patigam and Śilap., XXVIII, ll. 115-19 also XXVII, ll. 118 ff.

63 Śilap., XXV, 160 ff.

64 Vide my article ‘A Problem of Ancient South Indian History’ in III, J.I.H. pp. 643 ff., also Chap. VII, S. 5 infra.
OF THE ŠANGAM PERIOD

is probably a substratum of fact in the account of Šen-Kuṭṭuvan’s expedition to the north. Reading that epic and Paraṇar’s fifth decad of Patirṛup-pattu, we can easily see that Šen-Kuṭṭuvan was pre-eminently a warrior, who always sought fresh conquests. Patirṛup-pattu 50 tells us that he spent long nights in thinking out plans for successful campaigns. We learn from Silappadhikāram that for fifty out of the fifty-five years of his reign, he was engaged in gaining the laurels of war. He was the most powerful monarch of his day in the South, and his might was such that he could domineer over the Cōla and the Pāṇḍya. This will be patent from the fact that the insignia that his royal decrees bore, consisted of the bow, the fish, and the tiger.

In spite of his constant wars, his internal administration of the country left nothing to be desired. He was a great patron of arts and letters, and he was so lavish that even the treasures he had brought from his naval victory he bestowed on bards and singers without strict regard to merit; so indiscriminate was he in his bounty. He was probably partial to Kūṭtu or dancing and the drama which he patronised very liberally; and we read in 65 Shorter History, p. 174.

67 Šilap., XXV, 171. 2; 87-90; XXVI, 168 ff.
68 Patirṛup-pattu, 49.
69 Ibid., 42.
Śilappadhikāram that on his return from his eventful expedition to the North, a Śākkaiyan of Paravūr, a town in North Travancore, well versed in the art of Kūttu, entertained him and the queen by reciting with appropriate action the story of Trpura-Samhāra. He is said to have made a free gift of the revenue derived from Umbarkāḍu to Paraṇar in appreciation of the fifth decad of Patirup-pattu. He did much to develop trade and commerce; and at his ports, foreign merchantmen called and carried on brisk business. We read that large and beautiful ships of the Yavanas brought gold in great quantity to the port of Muširi and went back laden with pepper, and that Kuṭṭuvān distributed as presents the rare products of the sea and the mountain. His was a rich country, with a never failing supply of water. The Periyār, the principal river of the Cēra country, is described as full even in seasons of drought, and the people that it attracted for bath are stated to be ‘innumerable like the sands of the beach’. In luxuriance, the land was even as rich as the country ‘watered not only by the Kāvēri but by the accumulated waters of Mukkuḍal’ or the confluent waters of three 70 Śilap., XXVIII, ll. 76-7.

71 Agam, 149; and Puram, 343.
72 Patirup-pattu 43.
73 Ibid., 48.
74 Ibid., 50.
rivers. Toddy was freely consumed in large measure. In hot weather, he used to camp in shady forests; and we find from Silappadikāram that it was when he was so camping on one occasion that he received news of Kaṇṇaki’s death from hillmen who had witnessed it. A detailed and informing account of Cēran Śen-Kuṭṭuvan is supplied by Pandit M. Raghava Iyengar in his learned monograph on that monarch. This great Cēra King reigned for 55 years; and in his kingdom Hindus, Jains and Buddhists lived together in perfect amity. His consecration of a temple to Pattini-Dēvi was an event of international significance; and among those who attended the function was King Gaja-Bāhu of Ceylon. Probably this event contributed much to the spread of Bhagavati worship, now so common on the Malabar coast.

S. 7. Ādu-kōtpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan.

Next in order to Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, Patiṟṟup-pattu deals with Ādu-kōtpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan, alleged to be another son of Imayavaramban Neḏum-Cēralātan and brother of Nārmudiccēral. He is the hero of the sixth decad of Patiṟṟup-pattu, the author of which is Kākkai-pāḍinīyār Nacceḻaiyār. The prefix 75 Patiṟṟup-pattu, 43. Vide Purān, 316 for a poem in praise of toddy.

76 Ibid., 48.
77 The book has run to a Third Edition.
Adu-kōṭpāṭṭu to his name Čerālātαn is apparently explained by the statements in Patirrūp-pattu 56 and 57 that he used in the flush of victory to dance with sword held high in the field of battle. The Patigam to this decand gives another explanation, namely that he recovered a herd of cattle, lifted probably as a prelude to war by a neighbouring hostile chieftain. We know that in early days cattle-lifting was a common method of inaugurating hostile operations in war. Or perhaps, கோட்டூ here only means வெள்ள or victory, as it often does in Śangam literature. Naccellaiyār does not mention any particular battle that this Čerā fought; but her poem enables us to see that he must have been a great warrior, as he is described as பூமைக்கும் புனிதமண்ணள் and குறுக்கு விளைளும் சார்கை மையந்தே. Trade and commerce on a large scale flourished in the country. She mentions that valuable commodities brought into this Čerālātαn's port were stored in godowns. There were so few needy people in his city of ancient fame situated on the sea shore, that the king used to send vehicles to other places to bring men that he might bestow gifts 78 Cf. கோட்டூ சின்னஸ்சாரா கே (Patirrūp-pattu, 56, l. 4, 8).

79 Agam, 372. See also Dikshitar's Studies in Tamil Literature and History, pp. 229-30.

80 Patirrūp-pattu 51.

81 Ibid., 55. சுரோக்கையா சார்கை ரீதம்சா யார்கே
Music and dancing were encouraged by him and were richly rewarded. Many feudatory chiefs owed him allegiance. His kingdom extended beyond the port of Naṟavu, probably the Naoura of the Periplus or the Nitria of Pliny, which has been identified by Yule and others with Mangalore at the mouth of the river Nētravatī. This is the first mention we have of Naṟavu in connection with the Cēras; and we may not unreasonably hold that Ādu-kōtpāṭṭu Cēralātan captured this sea-coast town. Perhaps, it is to this event that Veḷḷivitiyār alludes when she writes in * Ağam 45—*

She must have been proximate in date to Auvai who refers to her domestic history and, therefore, proximate also to Rājasūyam-Vēṭṭa Peru-Naṟ-Kiḷḷi and Cēramān Mākkōdai, and must have lived after Karikāla Cōla, as she pathetically exclaims that her fate should not be similar to that of Ādi-Manti, an alleged daughter of that Cōla; and during this period, no Cēra answers to the name or title Vānavaramban except Ādu-kōtpāṭṭu Cēralātan.

From Puṟam 65 and 66 and * Ağam* 55 we gather that the Cōla Karikāl Vaḷavan won a battle at Veṇṇi, and the name of his opponent in that battle appears as Cēramān Perūm-Cēralātan in the colophon; and in a foot-note we are told that another reading of the name is Perum-Tōḷātan. In Agam 55 he is called only Cēralātan. The identification of the Coḷa and the Cēra mentioned in these poems has caused me much anxious thought; and though I once held otherwise, I now hold that the probabilities are that Karikālan is the well-known Coḷa emperor, the son of Uruva-pahrer Iḷam-Șet-Cenni and the hero of Porunar-ărṇu-padai and Paṭṭinap-pālai, and the Cēra, Perum-Cēralātan is Āḍu-kōtpāṭṭu Cēralātan. There is no doubt that the great Karikāla did win a famous battle at Veṇṇi, in which the Cēra, the Pāṇḍya and the Veḷir chieftains were defeated.

---

83 Patiṟṟup-pattu, 57, 58 and 60.

84 Ibid., 58, IV Patiǥam.

Agam 246 is by Paraṇar, who has also sung of Uruva-pahrer Iḷam-Șet-Cenni and Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, and the former was the father and the latter a contemporary and relation of Karikāla. I see no compelling necessity to postulate two Karikālas, each of whom won a battle at Veṇṇi against a Cēra. The Cēralātan that fell at the battle of Veṇṇi, where the great Karikāla won a signal victory, must have been proximate in date to Kuṭṭuvan; and Āḍu-kōtpāṭṭu Cēralātan alone satisfies the test. If we be guided by Kalingattuparani, Karikāla’s victory at Veṇṇi must have been one of his late achievements; for 86 Porunar, ll. 143-48; Agam 246.

87 Puram 4.
88 Patiṟṟup-pattu V; Puram 369.
it was after his return from his northern expedition that he engaged the Čēra and the Pāṇḍya in battle and defeated them. Probably these two kings and the neighbouring chiefs took advantage of Karikāla’s absence from his territory in northern India, and attempted to portion out his kingdom among themselves; and hence the great battle of Veṇṇi that Karikāla fought against the confederate kings and chiefs. I am inclined to hold, therefore, that Āḍukōṭpāṭṭu Cēralātan met with his death at the battle of Veṇṇi. Perhaps Patirrup-pattu 58, ll. 10-12 will afford some explanation for the alternative name Perum-Tōlātan.

The battle of Veṇṇi is of special interest, as Puram 65 and 66 mention a peculiar practice among famous warriors in those early days. We are told that the Čēra king while facing his foe in battle was pierced by a shaft which ran through his body, wounding also his back; and as a wound on the back was regarded as a blot on heroism, the Čēra sat facing north and courted death by starvation. Starvation unto death as a penance has always been regarded in India, especially in ancient times, as an act of supreme fortitude and merit; and by this act the Čēra wiped out the humiliation that the wound on the back implied. Agam 55 shows that the act evoked the sympathy and admiration of several people who also gave up their life along with him; and brilliant as his victory was, Karikāla seems to have felt that the heroism of the vanquished Čēra's self-immolation surpassed his own as the victor of the day, and he had to be consoled with the assurance that the Čēra king was not greater than he in glory.\textsuperscript{90}

89 Kalinga. 183.

Naccellaiyār was richly rewarded with gold for jewels by Ādu-kōtpāṭṭu Čēralātan, and he further took her to himself. He is stated to have reigned for thirty-eight years.
CHAPTER II.

At this stage a digression into Puṟa-nānūru appears necessary. The Cēra Kings we have considered so far are, according to Patiṟṟup-pattu, descendants of Cēramān Perum-Cōṟṟu Udiyan Cēralātan. The remaining Cēra kings sung about in that work belong to another line of which the ancestor it is impossible to determine from that work. Before, however, taking up the consideration of the kings of that line celebrated in Patiṟṟup-pattu, it is at this stage necessary, it seems to me, to speak of a Cēra ruler who is not mentioned in Patiṟṟup-pattu. It will have been seen from the foregoing account that there was a vigorous expansion of the Cēra kingdom under the early Cēras. The work of conquest of the neighbouring territories and their annexation to the Cēra kingdom which began with Udiyan Cēralātan, the first Cēra king known to Tamil literature, was steadily continued in the reigns of his two sons Imayavaramban and Pal-yānai Šelkeḷu-Kuṭṭuvan. The last of these kings completed the conquest of Pūḷi-Nāḍu or Konkānam, the territory of the Nannans, who as ancient Tamil literature shows, were war-like chiefs who rarely missed an opportunity to harass their neighbours. He had also annexed the land of the Kongar which in those early times was the theatre of endless warfare among the three Tamil kings. Round about that region were numerous war-like tribes. In the circumstances, the Cēra, after the conquest and annexation of these northern regions, would as a measure of political wisdom and necessity, have thought of strengthening his position by establishing a viceroyalty in the north; and I suggest that Pal-yānai Šelkelu-Kuṭṭuvan, conqueror of Pūli-Nāḍu and Kongu-Nāḍu appointed the first viceroy investing him with palatine powers, and sent him to the newly acquired northern province.

This consideration induces me to bring in here as contemporary of Pal-yānai Šelkelu-Kuṭṭuvan, a Cēra king who, so far as the materials now available go, appears to stand unrelated to any other Cēra known to literature. He is Cēramān Karuvūr-ēriya Olvāl-Kōperum-Cēral Irumpoṟai. This name occurs in the colophon to one single poem alone\(^1\) which is by a poet, Narivēṟuttaḷaiyār, who does not appear to have sung about any other king or chieftain. It is not possible, therefore, to state from literature alone where exactly this Cēra king should be placed. We shall find presently that there was a line of Cēras who bore the name of Irumpoṟai; and in my view, the Cēral Irumpoṟais who figure in Tamil literature, represented, perhaps a junior branch of the

---

\(^1\) Puram 5.
Cēra dynasty and were in the position of Cēra viceroys with palatine powers stationed in the North Cēra country with head-quarters at Toṇḍi, after the Cēra Kingdom had extended northward. Oḷvāḷ-Kō-Perum-Cēral Irumpoṇai may be regarded as the first of these viceroys of the north, as he is said in the colophon to have gone to reign at Karuvūr.\footnote{\textit{\textbf{16}}} I take this Karuvūr to be different from Vaṅci, which according to me is Tiruvančikālam; and I tentatively hold that Oḷvāḷ-Kō-Perum-Cēral Irumpoṇai, as the first king of the branch, may be placed before Cēramān Antuvaṇ Cēral Irumpoṇai, mentioned in \textit{Patigam of Patiruppattu VII}. We have no information about Oḷvāḷ Kō-Perum Cēral Irumpoṇai except what is contained in \textit{Puṟam 5}. He was apparently a great warrior, as the epithet Oḷvāḷ (bright sword) implies. It is easy to gather from \textit{Puṟam 5} that his lust for war and carnage was almost insatiable; and the poet gives him a timely admonition to turn to the prime duty of protection of his subjects. The poem may be rendered as follows:

\begin{quote}
Lord of the forest region where, like herds
Of cattle, roam, among the huge black rocks
Resembling buffaloes, wild elephants!
Permit me—thou art great!—submit a word.
Detach thyself from those devoid of love
And mercy; they indeed, are marked for hell!
Be thou like parents who their children tend!
Protect thy land and people; 'tis worth-while!
\end{quote}

\textit{1a Puṟam 5.}
S. 2. Antuvan Cēral.

We may now pursue the study of the other decades of Patīṟṟup-pattu. The Patigam to the seventh decad of Patīṟṟup-pattu tells us that the hero of that decad was the son of Antuvan. His full name is Cēramān Antuvan Cēral Irumpōrai. There is a complete lack of materials about the activities of this Cēra. We can, however, say from the occurrence of Irumpōrai in his name that he belonged to the northern line that began with Karuvūr-ēriya Perum-Cēral Irumpōrai. I hold that Antuvan Cēral was, perhaps, the son and successor of Karuvūr-ēriya Perum-Cēral. The only incident connected with him of which we can be reasonably certain, is gathered from the colophon to Purām 13, sung by Uṟaiyūr ĖĬcĉēri Muḍā-Mōsiyār. We read that, by misadventure, the Cōla, Muḍittalai Kō-Perunaṟkillī, entered the precincts of Karuvūr, which then belonged to the Cēra, on a rutted elephant; and the poet in this poem tries to dissuade Antuvan Cēral from falling into the mistake of regarding the entry as an act of hostility on the part of the Cōla King. This was a period when in the land of the Cōlas, rival chiefs or clans, the Cennis and the Killis, were striving to extend their territory with a view to gain supremacy over the whole Cōla Kingdom. Sometimes as a diversion from their internal feuds and fights, a Cenni

2 Puram 13.
now or a Killi at another time led a raid into the neighbouring Cēra Kingdom; and Antuvan Cēral had, therefore, good reason for his mistake, if mistake it really was.

However, another predatory invasion of the Cēra territory seems to have been led by Neytañkānal Iḷam-Ṣeṭ-Cenni, probably a contemporary in the Cenni line of Muḍittalai Perunăr-Killī. We cannot affirm whether this Cenni was the same as Uruvapahrer Iḷam-Ṣeṭ-Cenni or was different from him; probably they were the same. The invading Cenni succeeded in capturing Pamalūr, which belonged to the Cēra; and this act of war naturally led to retaliation by the Cēra who advanced into the territory of the Cōla. The Cēra and the Cōla met in battle at Pōr, a place in the Cōla territory in the basin of the Kāvēri; and both the royal combatants met with their death in that battle. These two kings are said in the colophon to have been Cēramān Kuḍakko Neḍum-Cēralātan and Cōlan Velpahradakkai Peru-Viṣar-Killī, who had an alias Perunăr-Killī. Possibly Velpahradakkai Perunăr-Killī and Muḍittalai Perunăr-Killī are the same; and the Cēra may be taken to be Antuvan Cēral, who was undoubtedly a contemporary of that Cōla. In this view, we may hold that Antuvan Cēral

---

3 Puram 203.
4 Ibid., 62; 63.
5 Agam 186; 326.
6 Puram 62; 63.
also went by the name of Neḍum-Cēralātan at least in the latter part of his reign. We do not know how long his reign lasted.

S. 3. Šelvak-kaḍunkō-vāliyātan.

The next king we read of is his son, Šelvak-Kaḍunkō-vāliyātan, the hero of the seventh decade of Patiṛṛup-pattu, which was sung by Kapilar, one of the greatest of the Sangam poets. It is recorded that this king won a victory over the combined armies of the Cōla and the Pāṇḍya; and he was in such plentitude of power, that soon he had no enemy anywhere. His country was very prosperous; and there was pearl fishery in his sea ports. Kapilar went to his court after the demise of Pāri, whose name has come to be a by-word in Tamil literature to denote a most munificent patron of literature and art. What Maccenas was to Virgil and Horace, that Pāri was to Kapilar, who was his staunch and faithful friend and admirer. Kapilar says this Cēra King rivalled Pāri in munificence; and his bountifulness, says Paraṉar, became a by-word. The poet exultantly exclaims: "There are many kings; but what benefit do we derive from them? If bards appear even on the outskirts of your capital

7 Patiṛṛup-pattu 63; also 85.
8 Ibid., 69.
9 Ibid., 67.
10 Ibid., 61.
11 Agam 142.
OF THE ŚANGAM PERIOD

... city, it is your command they should be liberally rewarded, and they should not be put to the trouble of even seeing you. You shower ambrosia even more profusely than the clouds pour down rain. 12 Whatever may happen, your word remains unshakeable. Foes who have won renown in battle with others, gladly bow to you, regarding it as a privilege; and your benign love and generosity to them are unlimited. 13 He held Brahmanas in great respect. 14 The Patigam tells us that at the close of a Yāga he dedicated, as a gift, Okantur, a village, to Viṣṇu, the deity he worshipped. He rewarded Kapilar beyond the dreams of avarice. We are told that the poet was given 100,000 gold pieces or coins, and all the land that one could see from the top of a hill. Apparently this gift of land is not a myth; for we find Perum-Kuṇṭur-Kilār, another Śangam poet, exclaims 14a which means, ‘more numerous than the villages that the renowned poet Kapilar obtained.’

Selva-Kaḍun Kō was almost an idol of the poets. Besides the VII decad of Patirṟup-pattu, Kapilar has also sung two lyrics in Pura-nānūru about this Cēra. 15 In Puram 8 the king is extolled as transcending the sun and the moon 12 Patirṟup-pattu 64.

13 Ibid., 63.
14 Ibid., 63, 1.1.
14a Patirṟup-pattu 85.
15 Puram 8; 14.
in glory; and thus inferentially we are told that he is greater than the Cōla and the Pāṇḍya, who are regarded as descended from the Sun and the Moon respectively, and that they owned his supremacy. I give below a translation of the poem:

The Cēralātan of victorious arms,
Though small his kingdom, yet in prowess stands
Without a rival 'mong the ruling kings
Who his supremacy dare not contest!
In his munificence he stands alone!
Canst thou, O Sun! with that great king compare?
E'en though thou hast the wide expanse of heaven,
Thou shinest but by day! Thou turnest back
And dost conceal thyself before the moon!
Canst thou, O Moon! whose light streams down at night?

Thou art too fitful! Thou dost often change
And close behind the mountain safety seek!

Puruṣā 14 is also interesting, as throwing light on the might, greatness and geniality of this Cēra. The king seems to have made a playful remark about the softness of the poet's hand; and then the poet sang the following praise of the monarch:

Thy hands, O King! that to thy knees extend,
Control with well-shaped iron goad in time
Thy fierce-eyed elephant that breaks with ease
Fortified gates, with tough wood bolted fast,
And rein thy rushing charger that can clear Deep trenches filled with water. Seated high
In thy war-chariot, from thy quiver slung
O'er thy broad back, thou dost with forceful skill
Rain darts on foes and so thy hands are sealed,
Which on the poets presents rich bestow!
Like Muruga thou shinest, gracious king!
Thy chest, as tough and broad as earth itself,
Though threatening to thy foes, fills womankind
With pain of love insatiate. Thy hands
With constant kingly acts are firm and strong,
While we, thy bards, who thriving on thy gifts
Employ our hands in doing nothing else
Than eating meat well seasoned in sweet smoke,
Or rice with condiments and curry mixed,
Have hands that are effeminate and soft!

Paraṇar too has sung about the unparalleled liberality of this Cēra in Agam 142, in language that reminds us of Māmūlanār’s praise of Udiyan Cēral’s bounty in Agam 65. He writes: ‘Rejoice, O heart! like the suppliants who return from the court of Kaḍunkō, laden with largesse’. The king is there called Māntaran Poṇaiyan Kaḍunkō; and perhaps it is to the same king that reference is made in Agam 62 as Poṇaiyan, in Agam 303 as Paśum-pūṭ-Poṇaiyan and in Kuruntogai 89 as Perumpūṭ-Poṇaiyan. Selvak-Kaḍundō-vāliyātan reigned for twenty-five years and died at Cikkarpallī. We learn from Patirṟup-pattu 67 that his territory included Koḍumaṉam, probably the modern Koḻumam near Coimbatore.

S. 4. Perum-Cēral Irumporai.

He was succeeded by his son, Perum-Cēral Irumporai, a great warrior in whose praise Ariśil Kilār has sung the eighth decad of Patirṟup-pattu. He defeated Kaluval, the 16 Puram 387.

Idayar chief,\textsuperscript{17} and won a great victory at Takaður in Kollikkûram against Atiyamân Elini and two great kings.

\begin{quote}
It is said that his conquest of Takaður has been celebrated in an old Tamil work Takaður Yâttirai, now missing. His fame as a hero spread so rapidly that soon princes and chiefs and others bowed to him in submission;\textsuperscript{18} and he spared the lives of his foes when they submitted to him and paid him tribute, ‘even as spirits spare their victims when sacrifice is offered to them.'\textsuperscript{18a} His sway and power extended so far that he was not only the lord of Kolli and ‘the protecting armour’ of the people of Pûli-Nâdu, but he was even regarded as the lord of Pugār.—
\end{quote}

His ministers were men of wisdom who made the good of the people their chief concern.\textsuperscript{19} Both inland and sea-borne trade flourished in the land.\textsuperscript{20} The king performed Yāgas in accordance with the rules laid down,\textsuperscript{21} and the \textsuperscript{17} Patirrup-pattu, 71.

\textsuperscript{17a} Ibid., 78, VIII Patigam and Puçam, 230.
\textsuperscript{18} Ibid., 75.
\textsuperscript{18a} Ibid., 71.
\textsuperscript{18b} Ibid., 73.
\textsuperscript{19} Ibid., 72.
\textsuperscript{20} Ibid., 76.
\textsuperscript{21} Ibid., 74.
whole country was rich and prosperous. He was a great patron of learning; and the respect and regard with which he treated bards that sought him are exemplified by a supremely lovable act of high-souled magnanimity recorded in Puram 50 by Mōśu Kīranār. The poet’s art yielded him in those days high praise and rich gifts, and made him a welcome guest in every court. Mōśu Kīranār, when he arrived at the court of this great Cēra King, found the latter had gone out for a hunt; and the bard, who was tired, fell asleep by mistake on the couch intended for the king’s drum. The king discovered the poet sleeping; and with a greatness and nobility of heart that was beyond all praise, he not only did not disturb him but kept fanning him till he awoke refreshed! King and hero as he was, Perum-Cēral found light and life in the immortal song of the poet, whom he held in the greatest esteem. The colophon says that as reward he offered to Ariśil Kīlār, the author of the eighth decade of Patīṟṟup-pattu, even his very throne, and everything of value in the palace, which the poet, wisely declined to accept; and the king thereupon made Ariśil Kīlār his minister. This king reigned for seventeen years. It is interesting to note that this king is addressed as Kōdai Mārba23 which means: he who holds Lākṣmi in his breast. It must be after him that a subsequent Cēra came to bear that name.

22 Patīṟṟup-pattu, 71.
23 Ibid., 79.

S. 5. Ḫam-Cēral Irumporai.

He was succeeded by his son Ḫam-Cēral Irumporai, the hero of the ninth decad of Patirrup-pattu of which the author is Perum-Kunrur Kilār. This poet had met with bitter disappointment once when he sought this Cēra’s bounty.\(^24\) I give Puṟam 210.—

Forgetting thy high duty to protect Mankind, thou seest with eyes devoid of love
And helpful charity thy suppliants.
If other kings unsympathetic prove
Like thee, it would be best if men like me
Were never born! My pure and blameless wife Devoted unto me, if there be left Breath in her body, will be thinking still
Of me. Afraid am I if even now
Unjust and coward Death hath snatched her off!
I hasten home this instant her to save.
She hath, unable her distress to bear,
Been wishing oft in dire despair for death!
Live long, O King! Behold! Weighed down in heart,
I hence depart and carry back with me
My indigence, as helpless as the forts
Of foes that cannot stand 'gainst thy attack!

Later, the king and the poet understood each other, and the poet says: "I had thought that Ḫam-Cēral was a fierce prince, as all had been lauding his great prowess in war. I now see I was mistaken. Having known him personally, I see he is as sweet as the waters of \(^{24}\) Puṟam 210, 211.

Vāṇi river." Parenthetically, it may be observed that Vāṇi (Skt. Vāhini) is a river running north of Coimbatore, and is different from Bhavāṇi, and also from Ani-Vāṇi which is another name for the Periyār. He sustained the glory and munificence of his illustrious ancestors like Selvak-Kaṇḳō and the victors of Vāgai-parantalāi and Vīyalūr. His land abounded in sandal wood, agil (Dysoxylum malabarium) and sugar-cane. He was the lord of Toṇḍi, Kongar-Nādu, Kuṭṭuvar-Nādu and Pūḷi-Nādu. He defeated Perum Cōla, Iḷam Paḷaiyan Māran and Vicci, and destroyed the ‘five forts’. He was a brave, good, just and impartial ruler; and the poet pronounces in exultation the following benediction: "As the result of thy just and impartial rule, may the clouds never fail to yield bounteous rain! May there be rich pasturage for cattle; may the joyous birds thrive in groves; may fruits and edible roots be plenteous; may grain grow in abundance; may the whole land offer thee reverent praise! May good and virtuous men fill the land! Swerve not from thy kingly duty! May thy arms be victorious; and may thou and thy consort be blessed with long life, health

25 Patiṟṟup-pattu 86.
26 Ibid., 88, 90.
27 Ibid., 87.
28 Ibid., 88, 90.
29 Ibid., IX Patigam. and happiness."

There can be no doubt that peace and plenty reigned over the land of this bountiful king. It is no wonder that Perum-Kunrur Kilär asks his brother bards to proceed to the court of this monarch, where they would have liberal largesse bestowed on them.

Perum-Kunrur Kilär was most munificently rewarded with land, money and jewels for his poem by Ilaam-Cēral Irumporai, who seems to have delighted in rewarding secretly. He reigned, according to the colophon, for sixteen years.

---

30 Patiṟṟup-pattu, 89.
31 Ibid., 87.
32 Perum-Kunrur Kilär is said to have sung Puṟam 266 in honour of Uruvapahrer Ilam-Šet-Cenni (Colophon to Puṟam 266); but it seems to me the name of the Cōla is wrongly given there, and it should be Nalam-Killi alias Šet-Cenni, who is also referred to as Ter Van Killi.
33 Colophon of Patigam IX, Patiṟṟup-pattu.
CHAPTER III.

Examination of Results.

This finishes the list of Cēras sung about in Pāṭirrūp-pattu. Of the Cēras we have so-far considered, we can assert with confidence that Oḻvāḷ Perum-Cēral Irumporai, Antuvan-Cēral Irumporai, Šelva-kaḍunkō-vāḷiyātan; Perum-Cēral Irumporai of Takaḍūr fame and Iḷam-Cēral Irumporai ruled over the northern palatinate with Toṇṭi as their capital; and we may similarly assert that Vāṇavaramban Udiyan Cēralātan, Imayavaramban Nedum-Cēralātan, Palyānai Šelkelu-Kuṭṭuvan, Kaḷan-kāikaṇṭi-Nārmudic-Cēral and Šen-Kuṭṭuvan ruled at Vāṇci in the south. There can be no doubt that both branches were of the same family. Iḷam-Cēral Irumporai, the last of the Irumporais celebrated in song in Pāṭirrūp-pattu is described as descendant of Imayavaramban and Nārmudic-Cēral as well as of Perum-Cēral Irumporai.¹ How the necessity for two lines of Cēras may have risen I have already tried to explain; and it may be remembered that Palyānai Šelkelu-Kuṭṭuvan is also stated to have divided his kingdom among his kin. To which group should Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu-Cēralātan be assigned? After anxious consideration, I have come to the conclusion that he should be regarded as a ruler of the northern palatinate which had its capital at Tonći.

¹ Pāṭirrūp-pattu, 88.

Let us try to examine the results we have obtained. We saw Imayavaramban reigned for fifty-eight years. He had a brother, Palyānai Selke-lu-Kuṭṭuvan, who succeeded him, and reigned for twenty-five years. Imayavaramban is said to have had three sons, all of whom are said to have been reigning Čeras. Of these three, Nārmuḍiccēral reigned for twenty-five years; and on his death he was succeeded by Šen-Kuṭṭuvan who reigned for fifty-five years. Supposing Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu-Cēralātan was a son of Imayavaramban and ruled in Vañci, he must have succeeded Šen-Kuṭṭuvan; and even on the supposition that Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu-Cēralātan was but a babe in arms when Imayavaramban died—and that is obviously all but impossible—he must have been at least one hundred and five years old when he became king, and thereafter reigned for thirty-eight years. This is palpably absurd. We may be told that, perhaps, the high eminence that Imayavaramban and Šen-Kuṭṭuvan occupied as conquering heroes, who made the military prowess of their armies felt even in North India, induced the ascription of an exaggerated period to the reign of each of these two kings; but this hypothesis alone would not help us to solve the difficulty; for even if we allowed the conventional period of twenty-five years to each king that preceded Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu-Cēralātan, he must have waited seven-fifty years after his father's death to ascend the throne of the Cēra kingdom. If, however, we could possibly hold that one of the alleged three sons of Imayavaramban ruled at Toṇḍi, instead of regarding all the three of them as having ruled at Vañci, the difficulty would be almost entirely obviated.

I may here glance at a suggestion that the learned author of Cēran Šen-Kuṭṭuvan has made. He is inclined to hold that there were not only two lines of Cēras ruling simultaneously in Vañci and Toṇḍi, but there was also a third line co-existing with them that ruled in Māntai! He accordingly thinks that while Šen-Kuṭṭuvan was reigning in Vañci, Nārmuṭiccēral was reigning in Māntai, and the Irumpoṇais in Toṇḍi. There is no warrant for this suggested disintegration of the Cēra kingdom into several small Cēra principalities. This was the time when the Cēra kingdom was growing into power, and stood in need of consolidation; and there was particularly a strong line of kings who were capable of keeping the Cēra kingdom intact, not to speak of further extending it. When for the elucidation of a difficulty, a hypothesis has perforce to be postulated, the hypothesis should be as simple and free from complication as possible. We know as a fact of history that there were two lines of Cēras, one ruling in Vañci and the other at Toṇḍi. If we can find authority for holding that one of Imayavaramban's sons ruled at Toṇḍi and not at Vañci, the complication will be easily resolved.

Patirrup-pattu affords some material that would help us in this direction. The Patigam of sixth Patirrup-pattu says that the lifted cattle which Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu-Cēralātan recovered from Daṇḍāraniyam, a place in Ārya-Nāḍu, was removed by him to Toṇḍi and he there distributed cows among Brahmans, to whom a village in Kuḍa-Nāḍu was also given. From this we may assume that Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu-Cēralātan was ruling in Toṇḍi. This assumption receives support from the fact that he is associated with Naṟavu or Mangalore. I have before postulated that Olvāḷ-Perumcēral Irumpōrai of Karuvūr fame was sent by Palyānai Selkeḻu-Kuṭṭuvan as the first viceroy of the northern palatinate and that he was succeeded probably by Antuvan-Cēral as ruler at Toṇḍi. Of these two Cēras, little is known definitely. We do not know how long they reigned. In dealing with Antuvan-Cēral Irumpōrai, I have suggested that his reign witnessed an invasion by a Cōḷa who succeeded in capturing Pamalūr, and that 'Antuvan-Cēral died in the battle of Pōr, which was fought against the Cōḷa. In the circumstances, a strong man was needed in the northern province to succeed Antuvan-Cēral, and I suggest that such a man was found in Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu-Cēralātan. Even if he be held to be the brother of Nārmuḍic-Cēral, I suggest that he was sent by his elder brother, the reigning king of the Cēra kingdom, to rule over the Toṇḍi province, as perhaps, Śelvakaḍunkō-Vāliyātan was too young to succeed his father Antuvan-Cēral as ruler in the critical and troublous times that then existed.

2 Patirrup-pattu 60.

This is not a preposterous suggestion. But, was Ādu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan, really the brother of Nārmuḍic-Cēral? Are Cēralātan, the father of Nārmuḍic-Cēral and Kuḍakkō-Neḍum-Cēralātan, the father of Ādu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan, identical? I venture to hold that they are different, and that while Cēralātan, the father of Nārmuḍic-Cēral according to the patigam of IV Patirrup-pattu, belonged to the Vañci line, Kuḍakkō-Neḍum-Cēralātan mentioned in patigam of VI Patirrup-pattu as the father of Ādu-kōṭpāṭṭu belonged to the Toṇḍi branch. In dealing with the battle of Pōr, I made the suggestion that the Cēra King, Kuḍakkō-Neḍum-Cēralātan who died in that battle was Antuvan-Cēral Irumpoṟai; and if that identification be accepted, it makes it easy to hold that Ādu-kōṭpāṭṭu Cēralātan’s father was otherwise known as Antuvan-Cēral, that Ādu-kōṭpāṭṭu and Śelva-Kaḍunkō were consanguineous brothers of whom the former was the elder, and he naturally succeeded Antuvan-Cēral as the ruler of the northern Palatinate. On this hypothesis which does not seem to be violent, the following table of contemporaneous kings in the two branches may be constructed tentatively.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Cēras of Vañci</th>
<th>Cēras of Toṇdi</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. Perum-Śōṛṛu Udiyan-Cēralātan.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. Palyānai Šelkelu Kuṭṭuvan.</td>
<td>Karuvūr Ēriya Perum Cēral Irumporai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. Kaḷankāik-kaṇṇi Nārmudic-Cēral.</td>
<td>Antuvan Cēral; Āḍu-kōṭ-pāṭṭuc-Cēralātan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. Šen-Kuṭṭuvan.</td>
<td>Šelvak-kaḍunkō-vāliyātan; Perumcēral Irumporai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>담당-Cēral Irumporai</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CHAPTER IV.

For the remaining Cēras of whom we read in Śangam literature, we have to depend mainly on the colophons appended to Purā-nānūru lyrics; and our results can only be tentative. And first as regards the main line, we see from the fifth decad of Patirrup-pattu that Śen-Kuṭṭuvan had a son Kuṭṭuvan-Cēral, who was delivered by the former to Parañar. Pandit M. Raghava Aiyangar makes a happy suggestion that this probably means that the king entrusted his son for training and literary culture to the great poet. Accepting this suggestion, we may conclude that on the death of Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, Kuṭṭuvan-Cēral probably succeeded him. We find among the Cēramāns a king bearing the name Kuṭṭuvan-Kōdai; and I have little doubt that he is the same as Kuṭṭuvan-Cēral. Kuṭṭuvan-Kōdai is eulogised in Puram 51 by a poet called Kōnāṭṭu Ericcalūr Māḍalan Maturaikkumāranār. This poet has also sung of Pulavantip-palliit-tunicya Naḷam-Killī Śēṭ-Cenni, the Cōla whom in the war of succession that followed the death of Karikāla, we saw Śen-Kuṭṭuvan helped to ascend the throne. This renders it probable that Kuṭṭuvan-Kōdai was the next king in the main line after

1 Puram, 61.
Sen-Kuṭṭuvānu. If Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātān had reigned at Vaṇci, preceding Kuṭṭuvānu-Kōdai, Maturaik-kumāranār must have waited at least 40 years after he had sung Purām 61 to sing Purām 54; and this circumstance lends additional strength to my suggestion that Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātān belonged to the Tōṇḍi line. Possibly Kōdai's reign was not eventful and hardly counted in the way of wars and conquests. However it be, it is clear from Purām 54 that poets had easy access to his presence and that they were lavishly rewarded. This is not to be wondered at in a pupil of the great Paraṇār. It is my belief that Kuṭṭuvānu-Cēral āliās Kōdai is identical with Kōṭṭambalattut-tuṇcīa Māk-Kōdai, a royal poet, who like Hrothgar in Beowulf, 'the harp's sweet note awoke, and a song entoned both sooth and sad.' We have already referred to his poem, Agam 168, when dealing with Perum-Śōṛṭu Üdiyan-Cēralātān. I give below an English adaptation of a pathetic lyric,² he has sung on the demise of his queen.

"What charm hath life hence-forth for me?"
The king in his bereavement cried.
"My queen, how good and sweet was she!
The innocent of soul hath died.
My swelling sorrow knows no bound.
Alas! like to the common dead
I bore her to the burning ground
Where nought but spiny cactus spread.
A heap of fuel there arrayed.
Stood smould'ring her remains to claim:

² Purām, 245.
OF THE SANGAM PERIOD

With cruel hands my queen I laid Upon her couch of rising flame.
My queen hath left me. Like the sea
Though deep and surging is my grief,
It has no strength, alas! to me
From hated life to bring relief.
Would that grim death had come to me!

• The fairest queen on earth is dead!
The mainstay of my life was she!
And I survive, when she hath fled!"

S. 2. Ḩam-Kuṭṭuvan.

Aganānuru mentions as the author of Ḩam 153 one Cēramāṅ Ḩam-Kuṭṭuvan. This Ḩam-Kuṭṭuvan or Kuṭṭuvan the younger is, perhaps, the son of Kuṭṭuvan-Cēral, the son of Šen-Kuṭṭuvan. Kuṭṭuvan is the name of the king; and the descriptive word Ḩam is prefixed to it to distinguish him from, perhaps, Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, the great Kuṭṭuvan. Except that he was a Cēramāṅ or reigning Cēra, nothing further is known about him. The following is an English translation of Ḩam 153 attributed to this Cēramāṅ—

My heart with grief and pain intense is filled!
E’en when with sweet-voiced playmates she pursued

The shining ball, tired out she used to feel!
And now, cajoled by one hard-hearted, she Hath sudden yielded to his warm embrace,
And with him left at night, deserting us!
How can her tender feet traverse the dry
And trackless desert, where from bamboos tall,
That in the wind against each other rub,
Burst leaping flames, and to the mountain slope Convey her, where tall Kongu trees, which reach
The star-bespangled sky, shook by the wind,
Shed flowers honey-filled, like flambeaux flung,
Which are too hot to hold, by hands away!

Perhaps next in order in the main line came Pālaipādiya-Perum-Kaḍumkō. As it is, Pālaipādiya-Perum-Kaḍumkō stands unrelated to anyone. We can see from his Pālaikkali that he was a friend of the Pāṇḍya, and the Pāṇḍya Kingdom was well-known to him; and we see from Puram 11, perhaps the only poem sung about him, that he was the ruler of Vañci, and was a liberal patron of bards and minstrels. I give here an English rendering of the poem, the author of which is a lady named Pēy-maka! Ḳa-Vēyini.

The valiant king renowned in song, who rules
O'er far-famed Vañci, rising to the skies,
Where bashful maids with rounded arms that shine
With glistening hair and decked with jewels bright,
To images of sand make offerings
Of flowers gathered from o'erhanging boughs,
Before they plunge into the waters cool
Of Porunai, he through the fortress broke
Of valorous foes and made them turn and flee!

2a Pālaí, 34; 29 and 30.
With jewels rare of burnished gold immense
Did he reward her who his prowess sang?
And on him, who her song accompanied Bestowed he lotus flow’rs of flaming gold
With threads of shining silver closely strung.

In the scheme of succession that has been so far constructed from material supplied by ancient Tamil literature, there appears to be no room for introducing another reigning prince between Udiyan Cērātān and Iḷam-Kuṭṭuvan. Pālaipāḍiya-Perum-Kaḍumkō is not an imaginary figure; but he was undoubtedly one of the ancient Cēra Kings who reigned in Vaṅcīon-the-Porunai. I had once suggested that he was anterior in date to Šen-Kuṭṭuvan; but on further consideration, I have come to entertain the belief that he was posterior to Šen-Kuṭṭuvan. He must be somewhat anterior to Nallantuvanār, the redactor of Kalit-tokai. Nallantuvanār has been sung about by Marudan Ila-Nākanār, who was a contemporary of the Pāṇḍya, Iḷavantikaippallit-tuṇciya Nanmāran of whom another contemporary was Nakkirar; and Nakkirar, as we shall see presently, has sung of a succeeding generation of Kings. I, therefore, propose to place Pālaipāḍiya-Perum-Kaḍumkō after Iḷam-Kuṭṭuvan. It is obvious that Pālaipāḍiya Cēra cannot be placed later, as it was at the instance of the Pāṇḍya King Ugrap-peruvaluti, that Kalit-tokai was redacted.

3 Agam, 59.
4 Puram, 55.
5 Ibid., 56.
About the kingly exploits of Pālaipādiya Perum-Kaḍumkō, we have no record; but as I have shown elsewhere he has left an imperishable name as a Tamil poet. His poems, all of which relate to Pālai-tiṇai in Agap-poru, reveal the highest spirit of chivalry. In Narriṇai 9, he says that the gaining of the lady that one loves is like meeting the god one seeks. In Agam 185, he says that the man who leaves his love must be one with a heart of hard iron. It is pleasing to note in his poems the loyalty and tenderness of the wife, and the fidelity of the lady’s companion. In Agam 267, where the lady’s maid tries to comfort the lady, whose husband has left in quest of riches, the wife declares that if a husband leaves his spouse, it is due entirely to the inability of the latter to detain him with her. He frankly denounces the unsympathetic minister who misleads the king into deeds of injustice and oppression. It is clear from Narriṇai that the lighting of lamps on Kārtigai day was common even in those days, as he likens a tree in blossom to the appearance of a town illuminated on Tirukārtigai day. In Pālai I he refers to the reaction of elephants to music, which has the power of soothing them. Toddy was a favourite drink in his day, and people believed in 6 Pālai, 7 and 9.

8 Pālai, 3.
omens. Women wore along with their tāli (ताली) a gold jewel fashioned like or encasing the teeth of leopards.

I have elsewhere given English renderings of several lyrics by this Ėra from his Pālai-kāli and from Kuruntokai. He is a master of Pālai-tīnai. The appropriate motif of Pālai amatory poetry is separation; and it describes the effect on the wife when her husband proposes to go to distant lands across an intervening desert in quest of wealth. As an illustration of the royal poet’s art, imagery and poetic imagination, I shall give here an English echo of the opening lines of his Pālai-kāli and of a short poem by him included in Kuruntokai.

As blazed the wrath of Śiva, when to save Ayan and other gods, who sought his aid, He smote the dreaded, troublous Rākṣasas, And their destructive triple fortress laid In utter ruin, with like fierceness burns The sun, whose heat intense beats on the rocks And bursting them, with wreckage blocks the way In that vast desert!

—Pālai, 1.

Great is my spouse’s love for me! His early coming I foresee! Where he has gone, he eke will see Bull elephant with gallantry Break branches from the Āṭṭi tree

9 Pālai, 10.
10 Agam, 7.
11 J.I.H., XI, Part 2; Q.J.M.S., XXIII, No. 3.
And give them to its famished mate,
It may its hunger satiate!
That sight will speed him on to me!

― Kurum, 37.

Next, perhaps, came Cēramān Mā-Veṇkō, of whom there is mention made in the colophon to Puram 367. We may gather from it that he was a friend of Ugrap-peruvalūti, the Pāṇḍya, and Rājasūyamvēṭṭa Perunat-killī, the Cōla, whom I regard as the same as Neḍumudik-killī mentioned in Maṇimēkalai as the Victor of Kāriyāru.12 No other information is available about him.

We have no means of knowing who succeeded this Cēra at Vaṇci; but I hazard the guess that, perhaps, it was Cēramān Vaṇcan whose capital is described as the unapproachable ancient city of renown, Puram 398. We see from Agam 149, that a Pāṇḍya, probably Ugrap-Peruvalūti’s successor, sacked Muśiri, the port of Vaṇci and Puram 373 records that Vaṇci itself was invested and captured by Killī-valavan. From Puram 36, in which Ālattūr Kilār tries to dissuade him from his march on Vaṇci, we gather that the Cēra ruling then at Vaṇci was effeminate and afraid to take the field against the advancing Cōla. However, the Cōla advanced and Vaṇci-mūtūr fell, an event over which even a poetess of Killivaḷavan’s court, Märök-kattu Nappasalaiyār, expresses grief in Puram 37. The fall of Vaiñci was obviously an event of great moment, and was unexpected; and in Puram 39, the same lady, addressing the Cōla exclaims: ‘In what strains shall I praise thy great might and glory when thou hast brought down the renowned Cēra, whose ancestor had set the imprint of his bow on the long, golden peaked range of the Himalaya and whose impregnable capital city of Vaiñci has fallen before thy advance!’ Killi-Valavan is said to have invaded Kūdal also, and he is referred to as the Cōla of that name who died at Kūlamuṟṟam.

12 Maṇi, XIX, l. 126.
Dr. Pope thinks, and perhaps he is correct, that Kūlamuṟṟam and Kurāppalli are the same.
CHAPTER V.

S. 1. Yānaik-kaṭ-Śēy Māntaram-Cēral.

We may now turn to the northern line. In that branch, the outstanding figure is Yānaik-kaṭ-Śēy Māntaram-Cēral Irumpoṟai, whom I would place some time after Iḷam-Cēral Irumpoṟai; for before Māntaram-Cēral we must place Ātan-Avini, of whom Īṟampōkiyiar has sung in Ain-kurunūru, a Šāngam collection which was redacted at the instance of Yānaik-kaṭ-Śēy Māntaram-Cēral.¹ Nothing is known of this prince; but we may be safe in regarding him as the immediate predecessor of Yānaik-kaṭ-Śēy. Yānaik-kaṭ-Śēy Māntaram-Cēral² is wrongly asserted by Mr. Kanakasabhai, in his ‘Tamils 1800 Years Ago’ to be the son of Śen-Kuṭṭuvaṇ, and this incorrect statement has unfortunately been repeated by Dr. Ś. Krishnaswami Aiyangar and others, and has found its way into a recent text-book of Indian History.³ He is an outstanding figure among the later Cēras of the Šāngam period; and we find as many as six poems relating to him in Puranānūru. We can see from the poems that he was a wise ruler, beloved of his subjects who enjoyed peace and prosperity, and protection from external

---

1 Vide Ain. 1-10.
3 Banerji’s Junior History of India, p. 94.
enemies. He was also a great warrior, and in his early wars he seems to have had uniform success; but we have no details of those wars.

Puram 20 gives us a vivid description of this king; and I give below an English rendering of it as it shows how highly he was loved and adored.

The deep sea may be sounded; and the width
Of the vast earth, the air-pervading space
And eke the shapeless, overhanging sky,
May all be measured; but, O mighty King!
Thy wisdom, love and generosity
Defy all measure! Those who in the shade
Of thy protection live know but the heat
Of kitchen fire and of the glowing sun!
They only know the rainbow in the sky
But not the bow of slaughter! Nor do they Another weapon know except the plough!
Illustrious King! Thy valiant foes thou hast
With mighty armies vanquished, and their lands
Their fruits for thy enjoyment yield! Thy earth
But pregnant ladies eat to satisfy
Their craving, and is never touched by foes!
In thy well guarded forts thy arrows rest;
And in thy sceptre righteousness resides!
What though new birds may come or old birds leave,
What-e'er betide, thou dost thy kingdom guard
And peace ensure. And so with anxious hope
The world doth pray no harm should thee befall.

In Puram 53 we read that he won a victory at Vilankil, though it does not appear over whom. He had also his reverses. Among his wars was one he waged with Talaialamkānattuc-Cērvēnṭa Neḍum-Śeliyan, one of the greatest kings of the Pāṇḍya dynasty; and in that war, we learn from Puṇam 17 that he was made a captive by the Pāṇḍya. We read that his previous successes in war had been so constant that this reverse filled all with surprise. However, by his own strategy and valour he escaped, and the incident is immortalised in song in Puṇam 17, by Kuṟumkōliyūr Kīḷār. I give its translation below, as it supplies a good and interesting portraiture of the early Cēras, as also of Yānaik-kaṭ-Śēy.

Scion of the royal house whose kings have ruled
As undisputed monarch o’er the land
Which from Kumari on the south extends
To the high mountain on the north, and lies Between the eastern and the western sea!

Thy sires their royal sceptre even held
O’er all their subjects whereso-e’er they lived,
In hill or mountain, forest or in town;
Protecting them with equal justice, they
Chastised all wrong and, as their due, received
The share of yield from land by law allowed.

O Toṇḍi’s lord! Thy land the mountain fence Protects. Its sandy beach like moon-light shines;
There flourish stately palms which star-high grow,
Laden with bunches of sweet cocoanuts.
There spread extensive fields; and in the ponds
Of water clear bright flaming lotus blooms!

E’en as a strong and stately elephant
Regardless of the treach’rous pit whose mouth
Is cunningly o’erlaid, impetuous
Unto it rushes, and with tusks, full-grown
And murd’rous, gores the sides and fills it up
With earth it has dug up, and getting out
Goes back and joins the herd in its old haunt,
So thou, the victor in thy wars, whose foes
Bereft of their possessions bow in fee
To gain thy friendship or from policy,
Urged by thy courage irresistible,
Unmindful of thy foe, didst rush to war,
And when, to the bewilderment of all
Thy kith and kin, thou wert a captive made,
By thy unaided strength and stratagem
Thou didst redeem thy lapse and didst escape
And to thy realm and relatives return.

O king of Kuḍapād! I come to praise
Thy valour and thy fame. Unlimited
Is thy munificence! Thy warriors' shields
For rain-clouds are mistook! Large swarms of bees Settle on thy war-elephants, which they Mistake for mountains huge! Thy battle hosts,
The terror of thy enemies, are vast
As the great sea to which the clouds resort
For their supply of water! And the sound
Of thy war-drums resemble so the roar
Of thunder that dread snakes and venomous,
Trembling with fright, hang down their hooded heads!

It must be noted that the battle referred to in this poem cannot be the well-known battle of Talaiālammānam, which the Pāṇḍya Neḍum-Śeliyan, won against the confederate army of the Cēra, the Cōla and the five Vēlir chiefs: for we learn from Puram and Āgam that in that battle the Cēra, the Cōla and the chiefs that were their allies were slain by the Pāṇḍyan hero. We read also that in a battle

---

4 Puram, 76 and 77.
5 Agam, 36.
between Rājasāyam-vēṭṭa Perunār-Killī and Vānaik-kaṭ-Śey, the latter met with defeat.⁶

His internal administration appears to have been a blessing to his subjects. Poruntil Īlam-Kiranār, who is one of the poets that have sung about him, says it requires a bard of the eminence of Kapilar to sing the praises of this king.⁷ Another poet extols him for his just rule under which his subjects enjoyed the benefits of peace, 'knowing no bow except the rainbow, and no weapon except the plough',⁸ and praises the Cēra kingdom as a heaven on earth.⁹ He was also a great patron of learning; and it was at his instance that Aín-kurunūru was collected. Purā-nānūru has a touching lament on his death which one of his bards, Kūḍalūr-Kilār had dreaded would happen as he had witnessed the falling of a meteor at midnight, when the planets and stars were in a particular conjunction.¹⁰ Unfortunately the astronomical details cannot help us to discover the date of his demise. I am tempted to suggest that he is, perhaps, the hero of the missing 10th Patīṟṟup-pattu.

The next in that line will be Kōk-kōdai-Mārban. Poigaiyār, his court poet, tells us

---

⁶ Puram, 125
⁷ Ibid., 53.
⁸ Ibid., 20.
⁹ Ibid., 22.
¹⁰ Ibid., 229.
that he ruled at Toṇḍi, and that his country was the sea-board region; and though it was Neytal land, it also abounded in Kurinći and Marutam land or rich forests and paddy fields. The poet Nakkīrar tells us of an invasion of Kūḏal or Madura by Kīḻivalavān who slew Paḻaiyan-Mārān in that campaign, to the great joy of Kōḍai-Mārban. Possibly Paḻaiyan-Mārān, who we saw, had been defeated in battle by Iḷam-Cēral Irumporai, began to give trouble to the Cēra, whose power after the defeat of Yānaik-kaṭ-Śēy Māntaram-Cēral by the Cōla and the Pāṇḍya had begun to wane; and hence Kōḍai-Mārban was rejoiced to see this troublesome chief defeated and killed by the Cōla. No details relating to this Cēra are available.

He apparently took his name Kōḍai-Mārban from his great ancestor Perum-Cēral Irumporai.

The next in order in that branch is Kaṇaikkāl Irumporai. Poigaiyār was his court poet. Mūvan, a chief who had incurred this Cēra’s displeasure, was punished by having his teeth pulled out and fixed on the gate at Toṇḍi as warning. Kaṇaikkāl Irumporai does not

---

11 Puṟam, 48, 49.
12 See Agam, 366.
14 Naṟriṇai, 18.
stand alone in inflicting this mode of punishment; for we read of other similar instances.\(^\text{15}\) We do not know anything about his reign; but we have definite information about his end, which was very heroic. We gather from Agam\(^\text{16}\) that Kaṇaiyan, a feudatory and general of the Cēra, along with other feudatory chiefs owing allegiance to the Cēra, met in battle Paḷaiyan, the Cōla general, who lost his life in the engagement. This infuriated Šen-Kaṇān, the Cōla King, who marched against Kaṇaiyan, killed him in battle and captured Kaḷumalam, a city of the Cēra.\(^\text{17}\) Kaṇaikkāl Irumporai, the Cēra King, could not stand this, and naturally went to war with Kō-Šen-Kaṇān. At the battle of Pōr, he was defeated and taken prisoner by Kō-Šen-Kaṇān, and confined at Kudavāyil-Kōṭṭam.\(^\text{18}\) It was on that occasion that Poigaiyār sang Kaḷavālī-Nārpatu in praise of Šen-Kaṇān, and won the release of his patron, Kaṇaikkāl Irumporai. In the meantime, Kaṇaikkāl feeling thirsty, asked for water which was not readily supplied; and he was so much stung by the insult that he preferred to die, rather than accept the water that the warders were so tardy in supplying. Before the order for release could be carried out, the proud and heroic Cēra had breathed his last;

\(^{15}\) Vida Agam, 211.

\(^{16}\) Agam, 44.

\(^{17}\) Agam, 270.

\(^{18}\) Puṟam, 74.
but he left a short poem, full of true epic grandeur, explaining the circumstances of his death. I give below a translation of Kaṇaikkāl Irumporai's swan-song.

Lo! Issue born but as a lifeless child,
Or even as a shapeless mass of flesh,
Amongst the kingly class with sword is clove!
But meaner e'en than these am I, confined
Like a chained dog, condemned to live in shame!
Can he be king-born who with his own mouth,
Too weak his body's craving to resist,
Begs for a cup of water from his foe?
'Tis better far to die than thus to live! 19

We have now dwelt with all the Cēra Kings mentioned in Patirṟup-pattu and Purā-nānūru. From the foregoing account, we are in a position to continue the line of succession in the two branches, from where we have left before.

Vañci Branch.

1. Kuttuvan-Cēral or Kuttuvan-Kōdai.
2. Cēramān Ilam-Kuttuvan.
5. Cēramān Vañcan.

Toṇdi Branch.

1. Ātan-Avani.
2. Yānaik-kaṭ-Śey Māntaram-Cēral.

Though we have no means of knowing the exact relationship in which each succeeding 19 Puram. There is a fine play in Tamil, bearing the title Māna Vijayam, written by the late Pandit V. G. Suryanarayana Sastri, based on this incident.

ruler in the above succession list stood to his predecessor, I think we may safely suppose the correctness of the above order of succession in either branch. Kuṭṭuvan-Kōdai or Māk-Kōdai may be regarded as contemporaneous with Perum-Cēral Irumpōrāi and to their period may perhaps be assigned Kāriyāṟṟuttuñciya Neḍum-Killī besides possibly Cōla Nāḷam-Killī Śeṭ-Cenni. Mā-Veṅkō and Yānaikkat-Sēy were both contemporaries of the Cōla Rājasūyamvēṭṭa Perunār-Killī; and Kō-Kōdai Mārbān was contemporaneous with Killī-Nāḷavan, whom I regard as the same as the Cōla of that name who died at Kuḷamurṟam. 20 Lastly Kaṇaikkāl Irumpōrāi and Cōlan Śen-Kaṇān were contemporaries. Thus the Sangam works enable us to gain a connected account of the Cēras for about twelve generations from Udiyan-Cēral to Kaṇaikkāl Irumpōrāi; and during all this period the Cēra dynasty had continuous social or political relation, the latter sometimes friendly and sometimes hostile, with the Cōla line of kings from Tittan’s son, Pōrvaikkō Perunār-Killī to Śen-Kaṇān. The statement found in some books that the Cēra ascendancy passed away in the course of one generation is wrong. 21

20 Puram, 373.
21 E.g. Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar’s Beginnings of South Indian History, p. 131.
S. 4. Rule of Succession.

In our account of the succession, the rule of lineal descent from father to son has been followed. Recently it has been sought to make out that the rule of succession followed among the Sangam Čēras was collateral, not from father to son, but from uncle to nephew. This is a gratuitous attempt suggested, perhaps, by the prevalence of Marumakkattāyam succession in modern Malabar. When and in what circumstances Marumakkattāyam law of inheritance came to be followed in Malabar, need not now be investigated; but it is quite certain that succession among Sangam Čēras was not regulated by Marumakkattāyam law. Mr. M. Srinivasa Aiyangar in his Tamil Studies cavalierly assumed that the Sangam Čēras were succeeded by their nephews or sister's sons; but the assumption fell flat on the Tamil world. Quite recently, however, Mr. Somasundara Bharati of the Annamalai University has revived the story. It seems to me that he has proceeded on a misunderstanding of the relevant texts in Patirrup-pattu. The portions bearing on the question appear in the patigams, and they are extracted below:

1.  ❍❖ ❍❖ ❍❖
    மன்னர் சோறு மன்னரால் வெளிய வருவ கால்
    ...
    ...
    ...

    Patirrup-pattu, II Patigam.

22 See p. 103 ff.
23 See Šen Tamil, Vol. XXVII.
In the first extract Vēnāmāllini is composed of Vel (வெல்) Māl (மால்) and Nallini (நல்லிநி). Māl (மால்) means Magal (மாகல்), daughter, as Mān (மந்) means Magan (மகன்) son. So the passage literally means: Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan, the son born to Udiyan-Cēral by Nallini, the daughter of Velīyan Vēl, or Velīyan, the Vēlir chief. The translation of the second extract is: Nārmudic-Cēral, the son born to Cēralātan by Vēl-Āvikkōmān Paduman-Dēvi, that is, Paduman-Dēvi, the daughter of Vēl-Āvikkōmān. It was not unusual, and even today in the Tamil country it is usual, to place before the name of the daughter a surname denoting her father. In the preceding extract we have Velīyan Vēl-māl Nallini. A classical example of this usage is supplied by the name of the authoress of Puṟam 83, 84 and 85, Perumkōli Nāykan Maṇaḷ-Nakkānaiyār.\textsuperscript{23a} Dēvi does not mean here wife as it has been mistakenly construed; nor does it mean daughter, as contended by others. It is really a part of the name of the lady. The text in the third extract is apparently faulty as there is no lady mentioned in it, unless we take Maṇakkili to denote a lady's name. Then Cōḷan Maṇakkili would mean Maṇakkili whose father was the Cōḷa. Śilappadhipkaram, however, tells us that Šenkuṭṭuvaṇ’s mother's name was Naṟcōṇai, and I \textsuperscript{23a} Cf. குழலையால் குருக்கு வெண்டுவியுள்; Agam, 352.

முருவையுள்ளவைப்புத்தையுள்; Agam, 163; 217;
235 and 294.
அம்மவர் நூற்றணவர் Agam, 160.
பூங்காண்ம புவீவராக கண்டெட்டையுள் Agam, 154.
சுருளர் தண்டோலை புராம, 11.
would, therefore, insert Naיכoనai after Ma.�akki心头 to get the true reading. In the next extract Dēvi is the name of the lady, her father being Vēl-Āvikkōmān; and she bore a son, Ādu-kōṭpāttu-Cēralātan to Neḍum-Cēralātan.
In the fifth extract Po�taiyan Perum-Dēvi, the daughter of Orutantai bore Antuvan a son, Śelvaka-kâdunkō. Here Po­taiyan Perum-Dēvi may either be the name of the lady or, as is probable, it may mean the ‘Queen of the Po�taiyan’ or Cēra. In the next extract, the name is the same as in the second extract and the same explanation as that given in that connection will apply. The last extract says, Maiyūrikīlān Vēnmāl Antuvan-Śellai bore
Iḷam-Cēral to Kuṭṭuvan-Iruporaiai. It is clear that the name of the lady is Antuvan-Śellai, the daughter of Maiyūr-Kīlān-Vēl. Reading the relevant portions, therefore, carefully, we see there is no warrant for saying that there is any trace in them to suggest that the succession was not linear, from father to son, but was collateral, from uncle to nephew.

In Patirrup-pattu,24 Imayavaramban and Iḷam-Cēral Irumporaiai are urged to rival the ancestors of their race and it will be difficult to believe that the ancestors whom they were exhorted to rival were not their paternal forefathers. Again Śelvaka-kâdunkō is addressed as 24 Patirrup-pattu, 14 and 85.

the illustrious son of great ancestors and Śenkuṭṭuvan is described as "the descendant of the Cēra who imprinted the mark of his bow on the Himalayas," alluding to Imayavaramban. It will again be difficult to say that the references in these instances are not to direct lineage and ancestry. The advocate of Maṟumakkattāyam succession among the Šangam Cēras would have us believe that Cēra women belonged to a matriarchal family, but they were freely married by Vēls and Cōlas, who were not Maṟumakkavaḷi people. The children born of these marriages had no right to their father's estate, but perforce took their uncle's to the prejudice of their uncle's sons, whose mothers might quite conceivably have been daughters of Cōla, Pāṇḍya and Vēḷir families. The Cēra's sons would, as a result, have no right in their parental family; nor would they have any in the families from which their mothers came, unless those families also followed the Maṟumakkattāyam system. And nobody will suggest that the succession among the Cōlas, Pāṇḍyas and Vēḷir was from uncle to nephew and not from father to son.\textsuperscript{27}

\textsuperscript{25} Patirrup-pattu, 67.
\textsuperscript{26} Šilap., XXV, ll. 1-3.
\textsuperscript{27} See also M. Raghava Aiyangar's Čēraṉēṭar Tāyvalakku and V. R. Ramachandra Dikshitar's The Maṟumakkattāyam and the Šangam Literature, Z.11. Leipzig, IX, 3, pp. 255 ff.
S. 5. A strange view of Patirrup-pattu.

Before we conclude this account, which has been constructed solely from the Sangam classics, we may just glance at a strange assertion about Patirrup-pattu in which a recent critic has indulged. He says that all the decades of Patirrup-pattu or at least a good portion of it should be the work of a single author, and the redactor with no clue about the authorship, might have ascribed the poems to different poets. Or the redactor had a number of poems by various authors and he made a judicious selection and arranged them on a uniform plan. The marked difference in style, thought and literary execution that any one can easily see between one decad and another rules out the probability and even the possibility of the whole of Patirrup-pattu being the work of a single poet. If, however, it was the work of a single author, how was it that his very name had been forgotten? He could not have wantonly suppressed it. We are not told why a poet should have practised such a deliberate and calculated joke on the literary world. Surely his name and eminence as a poet would not have suffered if he had owned them as his; on the other hand, the indisputable merit of the poems would have at once won for him an enviable position of pre-eminence among the ancient poets of the Tamil land. By the device that he has adopted, he has wilfully achieved obscurity; for even his very name is unknown. And was there even an absence of tradition about the authorship when the redaction was made? Speculations like this are unprofitable. Each decad has come to us as the work of a different poet; and the poems contain internal evidence to show that all the decades cannot have had the same authorship. Each decad professes to be a contemporary record of the achievements of its hero; and making full allowance for the predilections of court poets, one can still accept them as cogent contemporary documents, as there is not sufficient reason for questioning their authenticity.

I should say a word about Kēraḷōtpatti, which is regarded as the oldest account in Malayalam relating to Kērala history. It, however, seems to me that to glean history from this work is as hopeless as to seek for a needle in a haystack. Some one has not inappropriately, though with unnecessary severity of language, described it as a farrago of legendary nonsense. It is a work of about the 18th century; and it professes to tell us the story of Kērala from the time when at Paraśurāma’s command the country arose from out the azure main. The floating traditions on which the narrative was sought to be built were unhappily far too hazy to present any picture in perspective; and thus even as a source-book of early Kērala history it cannot unfortunately be of any real use. It tells us that after a period of indigenous kings, who were generally incompetent, the people selected kings from the neighbouring countries and brought them to Kērala, on the understanding that each was to rule for twelve years! These foreign rulers who were brought into the country were known as Perumāls; and the earliest of them is said to be one Kēya Perumāl, who made Allur or Kodungallur his capital. A suggestion has been made that this Perumāl is Perum-Śōrru Udiyan-Cēralatān; but I see absolutely no warrant for this. It is said that after him were brought in succession into Kērala, Cōla-perumāl, Pāṇḍi-perumāl, Cōliya or Kērala-perumāl, Taḷubham-perumāl, Indra-perumāl, Ārya-perumāl and others! It is obvious that the author had heard of invasions of Kērala by some Pāṇḍya, Cōla and other neighbouring kings or chiefs, who probably retired to their territory after their raid; and from that he wove this fanciful list of Perumāls brought by the people into Kērala to rule over the country! Even upon a most sympathetic consideration of the legendary mess presented in the pages of Kēralōtpatti, all that has been claimed for the work is that it may supply materials 'to fill up some parts of the wide gap in the history of the country from the fourth to the ninth century
A.C.\textsuperscript{29} The epoch we have been studying is, as will be shown later on, anterior to this period; and \textit{Keralōtpatti} cannot, therefore, be of any use for our purpose, even supposing it were possible to make it serve the purposes of history.
CHAPTER VI.

Vañci-mūtūr.

S. 1.

Among the problems of ancient Cēra history, nothing is of greater interest or importance than the identification of Vañci, the capital of the ancient Cēra Kingdom.

Puram 11 conveys the information that a Cēra king, said to be Pālai-pādiya Perum Kaḍunkō, was ruling in Vañci, where the cool waters of the Porunai flow; and the scholiast, of whom unfortunately nothing is known, explains Vañci as Karuvūr, and Porunai as Ānporunţam. This has recently given occasion for learned disquisitions by some Tamil scholars,¹ who have tried to establish that Vañci is Karūr in the Trichinopoly District. That Vañci is Kodum-kolūr (Cranganore) of which Tiruvañci-kaḷam is a suburb, has been held as an undisputed axiom by Tamil scholars from the beginning; and the reasoning by which that view has recently been attempted to be controverted is more perplexing than convincing. I propose to state a few relevant facts of outstanding significance, that will help us in the solution of the question.

The close connection of Śilappadhikāram and Maṇimēkalai with the Cēra country and its capital city is well known; and it is worthy of note that, while they speak of Vañci or Vañci-mūtūr, they do not mention Karuvūr at all. Patīrṇup-pattu, which is devoted entirely to the praise of the Cēras, does not so much as even mention Karuvūr, while it refers to Vañci-mūtūr. The Puṇanānūru collection, which contains many lyrics in praise of Cēra kings, refers by name to Vañci; but it does not mention Karuvūr anywhere. Among the Aga-nānūru collection, two poems mention Vañci, and one mentions Karuvūr; and this is the only instance in ancient poetic literature, so far as the published works of the Śangam age go, of Karuvūr appearing in the text. In Paripādal, no mention of Karuvūr is made; but Vañci occurs, and is described as of equal importance with Madura, and Kōli (Uṟaiyūr). So too, in the Pattup-pāṭṭu collection, Vañci alone occurs; and its position in the Cēra kingdom is described to be of the same eminence as Madura in the Pāṇḍya kingdom and Uṟantai in the Cōla kingdom. Kaḷavaḷināṟpatu was composed by Poigaiyār to secure the release of Cēramān Kāṉaikkāḷ Irumpōrai, who had been made a captive by Cōḷaṇ Kō-Šēṅkaṇṉān; and in that poem too, only 1a See Puṟam, 11, 32, 39, etc.

¹ See for example Mahāvidvān R. Raghava Aiyangar's Vañcimāṇagar.

2 See Agam, 263, 396 and 93.
3 See p. 175 (ed. 1918).
4 See Sirupāṉārṟuppadai, l. 50.
Vañci occurs⁵ and not Karuvūr. An examination of the Sangam works thus shows that the ancient poets knew the capital city of the Cēra as only Vañci; and except in only one solitary lyric in Aganānuṟu,⁶ they have not mentioned Karuvūr at all. Even this solitary instance need not be regarded as really an exception; for Karuvūr, as it occurs there, may be explained as a descriptive name meaning simply the prominent or impregnable city, and need not be regarded as a proper noun. That the city which was known to the poets as Vañci and was celebrated by them under that name was not Karuvūr of the Trichinopoly district, also seems to be clear from Agam 263, where Karuvūr Kaṭṭampāḷanār sings of Vañci as the capital city of the Cēra. Obviously Vañci and Karuvūr in Trichinopoly were regarded as two different places.

This is also seen from another fact we gather from ancient Tamil literature. That the Karuvūr region enjoyed the unenviable distinction of having frequently been the cock-pit of the Tamil country is patent from ancient works. Kongu-nāḍu was originally under its independent chief; but it afterwards passed into the possession of the rulers of each of the three Tamil kingdoms. Patiṟṟup-pattu⁷

---

⁵ Kaḷavali, St. 39.
⁶ Agam, 93.
⁷ Patiṟṟup-pattu, 22, 88 and 90.
shows that it once became subject to the Cēras. Puram 373 shows the territory had been conquered by the Cōlas; and Agam 253 shows that the Pāṇḍyās had also brought it under their sway. A place in such a region would obviously be ill-suited for the metropolis of a flourishing kingdom like Cēra-nādu. Puram 5 is sung by a poet called Nariverūt-talaiyār in praise of a Cēra, whose name is given as Cēramān Karuvūr-ēriya-Olvāt-Kopperum-Cēral-Irumpoṟai. This Cēral Irumpoṟai must have gone to reign at Karuvūr, as his description signifies, from some other city which was the metropolis of the Cēra kingdom; and there can be no doubt that that city was Vañci. I have stated that the extensive conquests towards the north made by Udiyan Cēralāṭan, Imayavaramban and Palyānai-selkeḷu-Kuṭṭuvan, the three earliest Cēra-kings known to Tamil literature, necessitated the establishment of a viceroyalty at Karuvūr, which as frontier town was perhaps coveted as a key position; and this Cēral Irumpoṟai, apparently a junior member of the house, went there invested with palatine prerogatives about the close of Palyānai's reign. From that time, the Cēral Irumpoṟais of whom we read in literature probably occupied the position of Cēra viceroys of the north, with their seat of government at Tōṇḍi, a sea-port town on the West coast; but the Cēra king himself had his capital at Vañci and not at Karuvūr. To avoid all possibility of confusion from the use of the expression Karuvūr in the Aganānūru lyric already referred to, the early Tamil lexicons, Pingalantai and Sēntan Divākaram explain by a separate sūtra⁸ that Karuvūr denotes Vaṅci. That sūtra was necessitated because of the occurrence of the unfamiliar word Karuvūr in a classical lyric; but, perhaps, owing to that very circumstance, later generations in course of time came to give the name Karuvūr the same currency as Vaṅci, little suspecting that it might lead long years afterwards to confusion.

Another fact that we gather from ancient Tamil classics may also be noticed here. Karuvūr of the Trichinopoly district is, as every one will admit, in what was known as Kongu-nāḍu and not in Malai-nāḍu. The third decad of Patiṟṟup-pattu is written by Pālai-gautamanār, in honour of Palyānai-śel-keḷu Kuṭṭuvan, the younger brother of Imaya-varamban-Neḍum-Cėralātan; and one of the poems in that section⁹ tells us that the hero of that decad effected the conquest of Kongu-nāḍu. Clearly then, Karuvūr of the Trichinopoly District could not have been the original capital of the Cēras; for the Cēras, as we know from literature, had already, before the conquest of ⁸ Pingala, p. 86 and Divākaram, P. 62.

---

⁹ Patiṟṟup-pattu, 22.
Kongu-nāḍu, established their fame and power as a ruling dynasty in the Tamil country. Again, we gather from Agam 29 that Kāri, the chief of Mullūr, slew Ōri, the chief of Kolli-malai, and delivered it to the Cēra; but Paraṇar who has sung in honour of Ṣen-Kuṭṭavan refers in Agam 208 to Ōri as still lord of the Kolli-mountains. These circumstances will show that Koṅgu-nāḍu and the adjacent region did not belong to the Cēras originally, but they were acquired by them only later. All this clearly indicates that the capital of the Cēra kingdom, Vañci-mūtūr, lay elsewhere than in Karuvūr situate in Koṅgu-nāḍu.

S. 2.

Though Vañci and Karuvūr had come to be regarded as convertible terms, it did not, however, mean that, in the conception of the Tamil literary world, the capital of the Cēra kingdom was not Vañci in Malai-nāḍu, but was Karuvūr in Kongu-nāḍu. The commentators, who came several centuries after the Śangam period, when they explained Vañci as Karuvūr, took care also to state that it was not the Karuvūr of the Trichinopoly District. Thus Aḍiyārkkku-nallār tells us that Vañci is Koḍuṅkōlūr;¹⁰ and Mahāmahōpādhyāya Dr. V. Swaminatha Aiyar, to whom all lovers of ¹⁰ See P. 19 of the Śilap. (3rd ed.).

ancient Tamil literature owe an immense debt of endless gratitude, writes the warning note that Karuvūr, the capital of the Cēra, is the city in Malai-nādu and not the Karuvūr situate in Koṅgu-nādu. 11 Śekkilār, the author of Periya-purāṇam, states clearly that Vañci is Koṭun-kolūr, and that Karuvūr in Koṅgu-nādu is a town of the Cōlas. 12 The inscriptions found in the latter place are all Cōla inscriptions; and there is nothing in them or anywhere in literature that I know which attributes its origin and rise to the Cēras. When Tirujñāna-sambanda sang a hymn in praise of this place, he called it Karuvūr-anilai, obviously to distinguish it from Karuvūr or Vañci of the Cēras in the West coast. Modern Tamil lexicons, e.g., Abidhāna-cintāmaṇi, explain that Vañci is Koṭun-kolūr near Cochin. It is the place that Sundaramūrti has in his Tēvāram, described as ‘Ānçaikkalam, of which Makōdai on the sea-coast is the ornament,’ and which in his day was the capital city of his royal friend, Cēramān Perumāl, the well-known Śaiva devotee. Makōdai or Muśiri in the seaport in the delta of the Periyār, the Tiruvaṅcālimukham of Kēralōtpatti, and is a part of the ancient royal city which Lakṣmi-Dāsa 11 Mānimēkalai, pp. 190–1, 376.

12 Tiruttontdar Purāṇam, Vellānai Sarukkam, St. 28. in his Śukasaṁdeśa\textsuperscript{13} (c. 900 A.C.) calls Rājadhānī Mahādayapuri, of which Tiruvaṇci-kaḷam in the centre formed the royal residence. This ancient royal town extended from the bar at the coast to Trākanaṇammatilakam, about four miles inland north-eastward, the seat of a famous Śaiva shrine, now unfortunately destroyed, to which the temple at Guruvāyūr and other places were once subordinate. Another name for Trākanaṇammatilakam was Guṇapuri or Guṇaka apparently the Guṇavāyil of Silappadikāram; and in his description of the place, the author of the Śukasaṁdeśa employs in relation to the neighbourhood the expression Kanakabhavana\textsuperscript{14} which reminds one of the \textsuperscript{13} Śukasaṁdeśa was published about 60 years ago by the late Viśākham Tirunāl Mahārāja of Travancore in the J.R.A.S. The references given in this book are to the edition of the Mangalodāyam Company, Trichur, in 1913. Sloka 68 describes Mahādayapuri as follows:—

\begin{quote}
उत्तरीष्टायुद्धिधितताकुशलः क्रमेऽथ
राजसतिधिधियसर्वसाक्षरीये गीयते यतिते।

Pūrvasaṁdeśa, Śl. 68 (p. 14).
\end{quote}

\textsuperscript{14} "कामशूल: कनकभवने यत्र चौकान्तसिंहम्
भस्मकुवर्ण जगति गुणकानाथं इत्युत्कुर्मी:।
आस्त्ये गौरीकर्मकुशमुद्यें वेदपञ्चनानां
वीरेश्वराचरणविशुद्धांद्रवृत्तान्तोऽस्मि।"

Uttarasaṁdeśa, Śl. 15 (p. 19).
Āḍaka-māḍam of Śilappadhikāram. It is interesting to note that, immediately to the north of Cranganore, the modern anglicized name for Koḍunkölür, and forming its approach from the backwater leading to Ernakulam, there is a place bearing the significant name of Karūr-paṭaṇa or as it is more generally called Karūr-paṭanam, meaning probably the salt pans of Karuvūr. It is only four or five miles north of Tiruvaṇeikalām and this fact suggests that for some reason not now obvious, Tiruvaṇeikalām had also come to be known as Karuvūr.

These considerations lend strong support to the view that Vaṇci is Tiruvaṇeikalām. In Śilappadhikāram, we read that Śen-Kuṭṭuvan left Vaṇci-muṛram to go to the forests. It will be seen that Vaṇci-muṛram and Vaṇci-kālam have the same meaning. Besides, it is seen from that epic that, when Śen-Kuṭṭuvan was about to start on his northern expedition, prasādam was brought to him from a neighbouring Viṣṇu temple situated at Āḍaka-māḍam which, according to the commentator was the temple at Trivandrum or at Iravipuram. Trivandrum may be rejected as being far away; but Iravipuram was close to Tiruvaṇeikalām; for I am told that in a Malayalam Campu, Nārāyanīyam, (c. 1600) Tripunnittura is called Ravigrām; and besides a portion of Ernakulam still bears the name Iravipuram. It seems to me, however, that we need not travel even to Iravipuram for the temple; for as I have already stated, within the limits of Trkanāmatilakam was Kanakabhavana, though unfortunately the place is now in ruins. Besides, Kēralōtpatti mentions in more than one place a pon-māḍam in Tiru-Kāriyūr,¹⁴ a place close by, which the late Mr. Kanakasabhai attempted to identify with the Cēra capital.

14a Or does it mean 'the port of Karuvūr'.

S. 3.

It has, however, been objected to this identification that the name of the place near Cochin is properly Ancaik-kaḷam as that is the name which it bears in Sundarar’s hymn.¹⁵ No doubt, in Tamil Śaivite literature, Tiruvaṅcaik-kaḷam is the consecrated name for the place; but I cannot regard this insignificant difference in spelling as a serious objection. Place-names often changed in form, owing to various reasons; and the change here by no means presents an insurmountable obstacle. In two Vaṭṭeluttu inscriptions found in the Śiva temple at Tiruvaṅcikkaḷam, the name of the place is written as Tiruvaṅcak-kāḷam. Is it not possible that by a pardonable mistake va may have been regarded as a transformed, owing to rules of liaison or sandhi, and i changed into ai innocently in pronunciation, ¹⁵ VIIth Tirumurai.

or from false analogy? We know that there is a tendency for Tamil place-names to end in \( ai \) (c.f. Urantai, Karantai, Tañjai, Nellai, Anantai, Mailai, Kailai). Thus Tiruvañcik-kañlam may have in course of time been unconsciously changed into Tiru-añcaik-kañlam. However that be, the objection appears to me to be too trivial for serious consideration. It may also be noted that, in the inscriptions found in the Śiva temple at this place, the name of the deity is given as Vañculēṣa.¹⁶ For some reasons, which at this distance of time it is not possible to ascertain, Vañci, the ancient capital of the Cēras, also came to bear an alternative name Karuvūr; but, as stated above, it misled no Tamilian into believing that that Karuvūr was the town of that name in the Trichinopoly district. It may, perhaps, be that the alternative name of Karuvūr for Vañci was known even in the second century of the Christian era, as Ptolemy (circa 150 A.C.) mentions Karoura as the royal seat of Kerobothras. If there were evidence that, even in those early days, the name Koñunkōlūr had become current, then we might posit that Ptolemy’s Karoura had nothing to do with Karuvūr, but was a corruption of Kōlūr in Koñunkōlūr. In the absence of such evidence, we may regard Karoura as a corruption of Karuvūr. Bishop Caldwell, influenced by the similarity of names, suggested the identification of Ptolemy’s Karoura with ¹⁶ Vide Travancore Arch. Series, VI, pp. 191–2.

"Karur, an important town in Coimbatore district originally included in the Cēra kingdom\textsuperscript{17} and this wrong lead which the learned bishop unwittingly gave has now been followed by some scholars, with what I am compelled to regard as misdirected zest. Possibly when he suggested the identification, Dr. Caldwell had momentarily forgotten that Pliny in his \textit{Natural History} (before 77 A.C.) had mentioned Muziris as the capital of the Čēras. After stating that Muziris was "the first emporium of India", he said: "The station for ships is at a distance from the shore and cargoes have to be landed and shipped by means of little boats. There reigned there, when I wrote this, Coelobothros". A few years after Pliny, the Periplus (circa 89 A.C.) contained the statement that Musiries "a city at the height of prosperity", was "two miles distant from the mouth of the river on which it is situated" and was "the seat of Government of the kingdom under the sway of Keprobotras". From the language of the classical writers, there can be no doubt that the two places Karoura and Musiris were not regarded as essentially different. By Karoura Ptolemy denoted, perhaps, the interior where the Čēra’s palace was, the present Tiruvaṉcik-kaḷam, while Muziris properly denoted Musiri or Makōdai, the commercial mart or port about a mile and a half lower down at the mouth of the Periyär—the Periyāru of Patiṟṟup-pattu\(^{18}\) or the Tiruvancaḷi-mukham of Kēralōtpatti and the Pseudostomos of the Greek writers. The same fact that Musiri is the Cēra’s capital and sea-port is conveyed by Puram 343 where we read: “Sacks of pepper are brought from the houses to the market. The gold received from the ships in exchange for commodities sold is brought to the shore in barges at Musiri, where the roar of the surging sea never ceases and where Kuṭṭuvan presents the rare products of the sea and the mountains to those that visit him”.

\textsuperscript{17} \textit{Comparative Grammar of the Dravidian Languages}.

S. 4.

If Vañci is Koḍunkōlūr or Tiruvancaḷikkaḷam, it must follow that the river Porunai or An-poruntam could not be the river Amarāvati as has been suggested by some, but should be the Periyār which falls into the sea on the southern side of Koḍunkōlūr. Kōṭṭaimukku, which is the site of an old fort at the north-eastern corner of Cranganore, is washed by the river Periyār on the south. The river is mentioned and described in Patiṟṟup-pattu as the most important of the rivers in the Cēra kingdom. That Vañci is on the bank of the Porunai river is patent from Puranāṇuṟu,\(^{19}\) and Śilappadhikāram.\(^{20}\) Porunai is apparently 18 Stanzaś 28, 43, 88, Agām, 149, Śilap. etc.

19 Lyrics 11 and 387.
20 Śilap. canto. 29.
the Tamil variant Parṇi in Tāmra-parṇi, for which river it is the recognized name in classical Tamil; and according to the lexicons an alternative name for Porunai is Poruntam. Tāmraparṇi is, as is well known, a river of the Pāṇḍya kingdom flowing east-ward; and obviously to distinguish the Porunai of the Cēra country from the Porunai of the Pāṇḍya kingdom, the prefix an was sometimes added to the former. Thus we have tān ān porunai in Purāṇam 36 and Agam 93, meaning, the cool Ān-porunai. These are the only two instances in old literature that I have come across, where the prefix appears. It has been suggested that in these instances ān, is perhaps, a mistake for ār; but it is, I think, a needless suggestion. The ancients may have thought that both the Tāmraparṇi and the Periyār had the same source; and, indeed, their sources are not far distant from each other.21 They both rise, to use the words of Messrs. Ward and Connor, "in the Alpine chain of the peninsula separating the Tinnevelly district from Travancore"; and so both rivers come to bear the same name, Porunai; but to distinguish one from the other, the above particle was prefixed to the river in the west; and both Pingalantai and Divākaram mention a river Ānporuntam, besides Porunai.

21 The Tāmraparṇi rises Agastya-malai, and the Periyār in Alitāimalai, probably the Ayirai-malai of the Śaṅgām works. or Poruntam. I may state here that Lakshmi-Dāsa in his Šukasainḍēśa\textsuperscript{22} describes the river flowing near the Rājadhāni Māhōdayapuri as the sister of the Tāmraparṇī. After the manner of Kālidāsa, Lakshmi-Dāsa employs a parrot as messenger to take his message to his wife at Trkaṇāmatilkākam or Guṇapuram. The expression occurring in the poem for the river is Čūrnī. Perhaps it is a variant of Čullī-āru, which is another name for Periyār, found in Šangam literature; and there still exists a place called Čullī a few miles north of Kālaḍī. Or it is a mislection for Pūrṇa; for written in grantha characters, one may easily be mistaken for the other. I also learn that in Śankara-Vijaya, wrongly attributed to Vidyāraṇya, Kālaḍī the birth-place of Śri Śankara is said to be situate on the banks of the Pūrṇa river. This work, I am convinced, is spurious, being not more than a century old; but I refer to it only to show that in a Sanskrit work written very long before the present controversy arose the Periyār bears the name Pūrṇa. We may also note the evidence of Tirupūnaturā or Tirupūrṇaturai, the town situated on the holy Pūrṇa river. Tirupūnaturā is the residence of the Mahārājas of Cochin.

\textsuperscript{22} Pūrvasainḍēśa, Śloka 65.

"

[śloka in Sanskrit]

" śa chaḍrē prabhātī samit śeḍarī tāṇāvyanā-ścūrī māhōdayapūrāṣattvō jāruṇāḥ kṣātoṁī: "

\textit{Op. cit.} (p. 14)."
Accepting Ānporunai or Ānporuntam as an approved literary name for the river on which Vañci is situate, we have still no warrant for taking those names to denote the Amarāvati river. The name Amarāvati is unknown to the Sangam poets, lexicographers, or the commentators. It is said that in Karuvūr-Sthala Purānam, a recent work by a comparatively unknown author, a line occurs in which Amarāvati is said to be otherwise known as Ānporunai; and on this statement found in a work of fancy or imagination, is rested the momentous conclusion that Ānporunai is Amarāvati. Another reason given is that āmbhiram means the mango tree; and as the Pingalantai gives cūtam as a name for Ānporuntam, and as cūtam also means the mango tree, Amarāvati and Ānporunai are identical! I may add in passing that Divākaram does not mention Cūtam as one of the names of Ānporuntam. All the lexicons—Pingalantai, Divākaram and Čudāmani—agree in mentioning Āni-vāni as a name for Ānporuntam; but it is significant that Amarāvati is not mentioned anywhere as an alternative name.

We thus see that the evidence alike of ancient and medieval Tamil literature, of ancient Cēra history and of approved and long established Tamil tradition points to the conclusion that Vañci is Tiru-Vañcikaḷam or Koḍum-kōlūr; and the recent attempt to unsettle this view by drawing a red herring across the track is, it seems to me, gratuitous.

23 Ch. IV, P. 99.
CHAPTER VII.

The Date of the Śangam Epoch.

S. 1.

What is the approximate date of the Śangam period? The question has proved to be one of the greatest puzzles of South Indian chronology, if we are to judge by the bewildering diversity of answers given to it. Indeed, one cannot help thinking that the methods of investigation that have been pursued must have been vitiated by some radical defect, when one notices that all possible dates from before the first to the tenth century after Christ have been assigned with greater or less confidence to the Śangam period. For example, the Encyclopædia Britannica informs us that the ‘Augustan age of Tamil literature,’ as the late Dr. Caldwell called this period, is to be placed somewhere between the ninth or tenth century and the thirteenth century A.C. Mr. L. D. Swamikannu Pillai and the officers of the Madras Archæological department tell us that we should seek for the Śangam period in the seventh or eighth century A.C. Pandit Raghava Aiyangar of the Tamil Lexicon Office has attempted to place the Śangam period in the fifth century A.C. Other scholars, of whom I may particularly mention the late Mr. Kanakasabhai Pillai, Dr. S. Krishnaswami 'Aiyangar, and Mr. Srinivasa Pillai of Tanjore,¹ have maintained that the Šangam period should be sought for in the second century B.C. There are yet others who would look for the Šangam period before the Christian era. The expounders of every one of these views are scholars of proved ability and established reputation; but obviously all of them cannot be right, and possibly all of them may be wrong. Each one has attempted to carry on research along his own line, and to state results independently of others; and everybody knows that the pursuit of special lines of investigation easily tends to beget prejudices, and in the statement of results it is not always easy to avoid the fallacies due to individual prepossessions.

¹ Tamil Varalāru in 2 Vols.

In examining the various answers returned to the question, we should remember that a hypothesis, however high the authority for it, can have no significance, if it has no real connection with the facts which it is supposed to explain. Nor can the validity of a hypothesis be inferred from its agreement with a single fact alone. It is a rule of inductive logic that a hypothesis is valid in proportion to the number and variety of facts which it is able to explain. In other words, the guarantee for the validity of a hypothesis consists in the consilience of results. A hypothesis may be accepted as reasonably established, when a number of independent facts point towards it as the one conception fitted to bring them all into intelligible relation. It will be my attempt here to test the various dates that have been advanced, and see how far they satisfy this rule.

S. 2. The Ninth or the Tenth Century Theory.

In spite of the high authority of the Encyclopædia Britannica, the view there expressed may be rejected as obsolete. That view was first stated about a century ago by the Rev. Dr. Caldwell, when the materials for the investigation of the problem were extremely scanty. In his article in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, Dr. Rost repeated that view; and that article has been bodily reproduced in the eleventh edition of that work. When Dr. Rost wrote his article, the old Śangam works, excepting the immortal Kurāl, had not been made available in print; but since then, many of the Śangam works have been published, and much valuable research has been made; and it is strange that the literary and historical material since brought to light has been totally ignored by the editors of the eleventh edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. How far out of focus is the date given in the Encyclopædia Britannica will be patent if we remember that upon that view the Śangam age will be posterior by several centuries to the earlier Śaiva hymnists, Jñānasambandar and Appar, who were the contemporaries of the great Pallava Narasimha I, the destroyer of Vatāpi. The late Prof. Sundaram Pillai of Trivandrum thoroughly exposed the unsustainability of this hypothesis in his "Some Mile-stones in Tamil Literature"; and one can only express one’s wonder, not unmixed with pain, that the error should still persist, and find its way into some works, intended to be of authority, like Frazer’s Literary History of India and the Imperial Gazetteer of India.

S. 3. The Seventh or the Eighth Century Theory.

If the view expressed in the Encyclopaedia Britannica may be summarily dismissed as out of date, the view expressed by Mr. Swamikanu Pillai cannot be dealt with so easily. He is a recognized authority on astronomical calculation; and it is with his assistance that the dates of many of the South Indian kings mentioned in inscriptions have been determined. The service that he has done to South Indian chronology is incalculable; and naturally, therefore, a date fixed by him as the result of astronomical calculation will prima facie command acceptance. And when to his personal authority, which is deservedly high, is added the fact that his date has won ready acceptance among the experts of the Government Archaeological department and some other scholars, his view would appear to be too well entrenched.

2 Published in the Madras College Magazine. Republished in the Tamilian Antiquary now defunct. to be easily assailed. From certain astronomical data found in Silappadhikāram and the eleventh Paripāḍal, both Śāngam works, he tells us\(^3\) that the former work cannot be anterior to 23rd July 756, and the latter must have been written after 17th June 634. The startling definiteness of the dates arrests attention, and tempts, not to say compels, acceptance. ‘To beard the lion in his den, the Douglas in his hall’ were, perhaps, less hazardous than to oppose Mr. Swamikannu Pillai on the question of an Indian date which he has fixed by calculation; nevertheless, with due deference, I venture to state that his dates in this matter cannot be accepted. To place the Śāngam period between the middle of the seventh and the middle of the eighth century would be to ignore altogether the political condition of Tamil India as depicted in the Śāngam works, and of the rest of India in that period as now known to us. From the time of Simhavishṇu (c. 575—600 A.C.) the Pallava supremacy was the most outstanding fact of South Indian history for nearly three centuries. The period indicated by Mr. Swamikannu Pillai is covered by the reigns of, among others, Mahēndra Varman I, Narasimhavarman I, Paramēśvara-varman I, Narasimhavarman II, and Nandi Varman II, all Pallavas of Kāñci; and during this period of Pallava domination, the Čēras and Cōḷas and to some extent the Pâñḍyas did not count for anything practically. The Šangam works make no reference to the Pallavas at all; not one Pallava king, great or insignificant, is even casually mentioned in those works. On the other hand, a large number of Cēras, Cōḷas and Pâñḍyas, with names some of which may be regarded as unpronounceable and almost forbidding, and many feudatory chiefs under them are sung about by the Šangam poets.

It is significant that not one Pâñḍya or Cōḷa king of the seventh or eighth century whom the inscriptions have brought to light is referred to in the Šangam works, while they belaud the prowess and munificence of a host of kings and chieftains that ruled and exercised authority over the Tamil kingdoms. No one would have the temerity to say that the Tamil kings and their achievements detailed in the Šangam works could be made to fit into the epoch of the Pallava ascendancy. These rulers must necessarily belong to a prior age. About the middle of the seventh century the Pâñḍya king of Madura was Kūn Pâñḍya alias Ninṛaśir Neḍu-Māraṇ, and the Pallava king of Kāṇci was Narasimha Varma I; while about the middle of the eighth century, the Pâñḍya and the Pallava kings were respectively Jaṭila Neḍuṇjaḍaiyan Parāntaka, the donor of the Vēlvikudi grant, and the well-known Nandivarman Pallava Malla. The Vēlvikudi plates, the text of which was first published by Mr. K. G. Sankar, in the Quarterly Journal of the Mythic Society, Bangalore, mention the Pāṇḍyan Muṭu Kuḍumi of the Śangam period as a remote ancestor of Ninrāśir Neḍu-Māran or as he is called in the grant, Māra Varman the victor at Nelvēli. This Neḍu-Māran was converted to Śaivism by Jñānasambanda, whose date is now definitely settled. Jñānasambanda and his elder contemporary Appar, who is said to have converted to Śaivism the Pallava Mahēndra Varman, son of Narasimha I, have in their Tēvāram hymns referred to the Cōla king Śen-Kaṇṭān, with reverential devotion; and it is seen from the references that by the time of the two hymnists, a hoary and consecrated legend had become woven about the name of that Cōla monarch. Dr. Hultzsch thinks that even at the time of the earliest of the dynastic Cōlas brought to light by epigraphical research, Śen-Kaṇṭān must have been only a name; and we see from the Tiruvālangādu plates of Rājēndra Cōla I, that Karikāla Cōla ‘of extensive glory’ was an ancestor of the ‘emperor’ Kō-Śen-Kaṇṭān. All this indisputably shows that we should seek for the Tamil kings of the Śangam era long before the middle of the seventh century.

Besides, as already stated, the middle of the seventh century coincides with the date of Jūnasambanda and Appar, and their royal disciples Nīṇṛasīr Neḍu-Mārān and Mahēndrā Varman. Those were the days when the Jains were most mercilessly persecuted both in the Pāṇḍya and the Pallava country. It is difficult to believe that it was during this period of bitter persecution, that the growth of classical Tamil literature went on apace, mainly under Jain auspices; for everybody conversant with Sangam literature knows to what great extent we are indebted to the Jains in that respect. The Sangam age witnessed a predominance of the Jains in Tamil letters. The author of Ṣilappadhikāram was a Jain; while his brother, the Cēra King, Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, was a Śaivite. It is patent that there was then perfect religious toleration, and the differences in religious belief did not break asunder the bonds of family; much less did they affect the amenities of social life. Again to look for the Sangam period in the seventh and the eighth centuries will be to regard the Sangam poets as contemporaries of the Śaiva hymnists and the Vaiṣṇava Ālvārś; and to do so would be to ignore the evidence supplied by the language, matter and verse-form and metre employed in the works of the Sangam and the hymnal period respectively.

Apart from the historical difficulties noticed above, it has also been shown that none of the dates supplied by Mr. Swamikannu Pillai can really be obtained from the astronomical data given in Śilappadhikāram and Paripādal. In a paper on ‘The Date of Śilappadhikāram’ which I published in 1917 in the Madras Christian College Magazine, I showed that in spite of Mr. Syyamikannu Pillai’s emphatic statement that 756 A.C. satisfies all the astronomical conditions mentioned in Śilappadhikāram, not even one condition could, without very material alteration, be made to apply to that year. Similarly, in regard to 634 A.C. which that distinguished scholar has arrived at from astronomical data found in XI Paripādal, Mr. S. Somasundara Desikar of Tiruarur has examined its correctness in a series of articles contributed by him to Šen Tamil,⁵ the organ of the Madura Tamil Śangam, and demonstrated its inaccuracy. Mr. K. G. Sankar, in a learned contribution to the Journal of Oriental Research,⁶ has shown that on 27th July 17 A.C. the major planets were exactly in the positions attributed to them in the Paripādal text and there was also coincidence of lunar eclipse and Agastyōdayam, as required by the text.

Mr. Swamikannu Pillai seeks support for his date from the mention of a week-day—Friday—in Śilappadhikāram⁷; and there are others who say that the mention of solar signs in Paripādal and in Maṇimēkalai prove that they are late works. I have dealt with this subject elsewhere in some detail. The argument is that India borrowed the planetary week-days and the solar signs from the Greeks at some time not earlier than the fifth century after Christ. It is said that the earliest known genuine instance of the use of a planetary week-day is afforded only by the Eran inscription of Budha-Gupta, which has been assigned by Dr. Fleet to 484 A.C.; and according to that great authority, there was no general practice of using the planetary names of days till the eighth century. From this it is argued that the composition of Śīlappadhi̊kāram may be as late as the eighth or the ninth century. In Vol. III of Dr. Fleet's Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, which contains the inscriptions of the early Guptas and their successors, besides the Eran inscription, there are only two other inscriptions, the Verawal inscriptions of 1246 and 1264, that mention a planetary week-day; would we be justified in saying from this that till the middle of the thirteenth century the people in the regions of the early Guptas and their successors were not familiar with the use of planetary week-days? As a matter of fact, the planetary week-days seem to have been known in India centuries before the fifth century. The expression Vāra, which imports a regulated division of the month, occurs in Atharva 8 Vide The Date of Śīlap., (Madras Christian Magazine, Sep. 1917); Solar Signs in Indian Literature, (Q.J.M.S., 1922).

---

⁷ Canto XXIII, l. 135.

Jyotisha. In Paithāmaha Samhitā, which is said to be of the same type as Vedānga Jyotisha,9 Tuesday is said to occur. In Gāthāsaptasati, which is attributed to Hāla Śatavāhana, and which Sir R. G. Bhandarkar thinks was either written by Hāla or was dedicated to him, we come across Angārakavāra (Tuesday). We have to place Hāla probably in the closing years of the first century B.C. or the opening years of the first century A.C. Āryadēva (c. second century) employs week-days. The Hitopadēsa mentions Bhaṭṭāraka vāra or Sunday. In the Vaikhānasa Dharmasūtra (c. third century) Budhavāra or Wednesday is mentioned. Yājñavalkya mentions planetary days. The Matsya Purāṇa, which is regarded as the earliest of the Purāṇas, is not only cognizant of the planetary week, but also deals with astral theology, for a chapter is devoted to the worship of the Sun on Ādityavāra.10

In southern India, Tiruvalluvar, who is considerably anterior in date to the authors of Śilappadhikāram and Maṇimēkalai, has a couplet in his Kūṟal11 which indicates the adoption of the seven-day week. One of Jñāna-sambanda’s patigams in the Tēvāram collection mentions all the days of the week in their 9 Now published by Dr. R. Shama Sastri in the Mysore Government Series.

10 Ch. 70.46; Ch. 253.7.
11 புத்தர் பெருமாள் தருண் பாரை
குரல் கால் பெருமை வெளியே குரல், 1278.
order; and it is clear from that passage that in the minds of the people each day of the week had a well-understood beneficent or malignant influence associated with it. As regards the solar sign, Baudhāyana, whom Prof. A. B. Keith places in the fifth century B.C., and Āryadēva (c. second century A.C.) mention the zodiacal signs; and so do also some of the Śmṛtis. Even supposing that the planetary names of the week-days and the solar zodiac were borrowed by India from elsewhere, literary evidence shows that it must have been long before the fifth century of the Christian era. It has been conclusively established that there was extensive intercourse and traffic between India and Babylonia and Assyria; and the recent discoveries at Harappa in the Punjab and at Mohenjo-Daro in Sind, prove the existence in India in the remote past of a civilization and culture closely akin to those of the Sumerians. The borrowing, if indeed there was a borrowing, may well have been from the Babylonian or Chaldean astrologers direct; and that is the view of the late Shankar Balakrishna Dikshit. In any event, India need not have waited till the fifth century A.C. to borrow this knowledge. Indeed Dr. Fleet himself practically concedes this when he admits in his article on Hindu chronology in the eleventh edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica that 12 ॐहमःश्रीरी नमःराम देवायामस्व प्राप्ति कस्मि किं त्वायामस्व श्रीरी नमः

राम कस्मि किं त्वायामस्व ॐहमःश्रीरी नमःराम

ॐहमःश्रीरी नमःराम कस्मि किं त्वायामस्व ॐहमःश्रीरी नमःराम

ॐहमःश्रीरी नमःराम कस्मि किं त्वायामस्व ॐहमःश्रीरी नमःराम
some of the astronomical books perhaps postulate an earlier knowledge of ‘the lords of the days’, and other writings indicate a still earlier use of the period of seven days.

S. 4. The Fifth Century Theory.

The fifth century has been suggested as the date of the Tamil Sangam by Pandit M. Raghava Aiyangār in his scholarly monograph on Cēran Šen-Kuṭṭuvaṇ. His argument has been largely influenced by a mislection of the Samudragupta inscription on the Aśoka Pillar at Allahabad, for which Dr. Fleet was originally responsible. The text of the inscription as published by Dr. Fleet contained the words Kauralaka-Mantarāja, and Dr. Fleet thought that Kauralaka must be a mistake for Kairalaka, and he translated the expression as Mantarāja of Kerala. Following this interpretation, the learned Pandit cast about to discover what he thought was confirmation in Tamil literature of Samudragupta’s supposed invasion of the Kērala kingdom. He equated Mantarāja with Māntaram Cēral of Šangam literature, and noticing in an Ahanānūru lyric reference to a military expedition by Vampa Mōriyar14 he stated that the expression Vampa Mōriyar meant the ‘new Mauryas’ or Guptas. Unfortunately for this reasoning, Dr. Kielhorn, 13 See also my ‘Solar Signs in Indian Literature’ (Q.J.M.S., 1922).

14 Ahāni, 251.
in studying the Aihole inscription, identified Kunala therein mentioned with the ‘Kaurala’ of the Allahabad inscription, and pointed out that Kaurala was a misreading. The proper rendering of the passage was settled by Dr. Kielhorn and Dr. Fleet in 1893; and it is now understood by all that the reference in the Allahabad inscription is to Samudragupta’s victory over the king who was reigning over the region round Kolleru or Colair lake. Nobody has yet claimed for Samudragupta conquest of any territory, south of Kānci; and Professor J. Dubreuil is of the definite opinion that Samudragupta did not advance south of the Krishna. However, this reasoning has now been given up by the learned Pandit, as in the second edition of his Cēran Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, he has omitted his arguments based on Vampa Mōriyar.15

Some have sought to make out that Sangam literature cannot have been anterior to the fifth century, as Maṉimēkalai makes a reference to the Gurjaras. The expression Kuṭṭara Kuṭḍigai16 occurs in Maṉimēkalai but in my view it has been wrongly interpreted to mean ‘a building in the architectural style of the Gurjaras’. I understand the expression to mean ‘a hut fashioned 15 Vide my article on The Kośar and the Vamba Mōriyar, (O.J.M.S., 1924).

16 Canto XVIII, l. 145.
or cut in a rock,' a rock-cave'; Kuṭṭaraka being a corrupt form of Kudhra (कुद्रा) a rock. The context seems to leave no room for doubt that this is the meaning. Prince Udayakumaran, in spite of Maṇimēkalai having become a Buddhist nun, lecherously seeks her in a dharmaśāla where she was serving food to the poor. She at once suspects him, and entering an inner apartment transforms herself with the help of a mantra into a strange lady, and then comes out. The prince does not recognize her, and after a vain search in the inner apartment, leaves the place. It is to denote this inner apartment that the expression Kuṭṭaraka Kuḍigai is employed in the poem. 17

It has also been sought to make out that canto 29 of Maṇimēkalai shows that, that work must have been written after Dinnāga; but this view has been successfully controverted by Professors S. S. Suryanarayana Sastri, 18 K. A. Nilakanta Sastri 19 and S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar. 20 18 J.I.H., VIII, 322 sqq.

19 Cōlas, I, p. 72.
20 Intro. to his Maṇimēkalai in its Historical Setting. Vide also my article on the Date of Maṇimēkalai in J.O.R., Vol. iii. There is a comparative study of great erudition under the title Niyāyap-piravēsa and Maṇimēkalai, published as a serial by Pandit Tirunārāyana Iyangar, the learned Editor of Śen Tamil, in Vols. XXXII and XXXIII of the Journal.
S. 5. The Second Century Theory.

The theory that assigns the Śangam epoch to the second century A.C. falls next to be considered; and if it explains, as I shall presently show it does, facts gatherable from the Śangam writings in such manner as no other date so far considered does, no a priori consideration of the remoteness of the date should deter us from accepting it. I have already referred to the astronomical data found in two of the Śangam works; and there is no reason to suppose that the authors of those works were only romancing when they mentioned those data. Taking the astronomical details found in Silappadhikāram, I have pointed out in my paper\(^2\) on the "Date of Silappadhikāram" that 171 A.C. will thoroughly satisfy the conditions in the text for the great fire that consumed Madura. In 171 A.C. 'Ādi twenty-sixth was Friday; Kṛṣṇa Saptami ended and Aṣṭami began 25 gh. 43 p. after sunrise, and Bharaṇi star ended and Kārtigai began at 49 gh. 57 p. after sunrise. Thus twenty-sixth 'Ādi 171 A.C. will fit in exactly for the fire at Madura; and if 171 be accepted as the date of the fire, then Śen-Kuṭṭuva Cēra must be taken to be living at that time. Let us see if this hypothesis will satisfy other facts relevant to our inquiry. Śangam literature discloses that when Śen-Kuṭṭuwan was reigning, Musiri was a flourishing scaport, frequented by foreign ships. Pliny, who wrote his geography about 80 A.C., says that Musiri was unsafe for ships to call at, owing to the existence of pirates; but apparently that danger had ceased to exist by the time of Ptolemy who died about 161 A.C.; for he speaks of that scaport as a great emporium, which it certainly was in Sen-Kuṭṭuvan’s time. Šen-Kuṭṭuvan was a king of great prowess; and one of the titled names Kaḍalōṭṭia Vēl-Kelu-Kuṭṭuvan or Kaḍal-pirakkōṭṭia-Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, by which Sangam poets refer to him is reminiscent of a decisive naval engagement, which, perhaps, resulted as already opined in driving away the pirates from the coast.

Again the value of synchronisms in fixing dates in Indian history is well known; and the matter contained in Šilappadhikāram affords scope for several applications of that method. That epic recounts that Šen-Kuṭṭuvan went on an expedition to North India, in which he was assisted by his ally Nūṟṟavar Kannar, that on that occasion he fought a battle on the banks of the Ganges, where he was opposed by the combined army of certain “Aryan” princes, among whom Vijaya, son of Balakumara, Rudra and others are mentioned; and that, after defeating the allied Aryan forces he returned with a slab of stone from the trans-Gangetic region for fashioning the image of Kaṇṇaki—the pattini-dēvi or wife-goddess—which he intended to consecrate in a temple to be built in her memory and honour. At the consecration which the author of the poem attended, the epic tells us that kings of various countries were present, and among them was Gayabāhu, king of Ceylon; and Gayabāhu, on returning to his country, ordered the erection of a shrine in honour of pattini-dēvi and ordained the annual celebration of a festival for her in the month of Āḍī. Now, nobody will question that for an invasion of the north by the Cēra King, the political condition not only in the other Tamil kingdoms but also outside Tamil India should be exceptionally weak and perturbed; and if we examine the political history of ancient India, there seem to be, so far as the materials now available go, only two or three periods when the Tamils could have marched into North India with any degree of success.

Going not further back than the third century B.C., we can state definitely that such an invasion could not have been possible in the times of Chandragupta Maurya, Bindusāra and Aśoka. It could not have occurred in Pushyamitra's time. It could have taken place between Aśoka's death and Pushyamitra's accession, perhaps; that is between 234 and 184 B.C. The period of the later Śungas appears to have been one of confusion; but the Śātavāhanas or Śātakarnis were already attempting to become powerful, and by the close of the first century B.C., they seem to have supplanted the Kaṇvas, and in the early years of the second century A.C. Gautamiputra Śri Śātakarni is seen from the Nasik inscription\textsuperscript{22} to have succeeded in defeating the Kṣaharatas and annexing their territory. So another date for the northern invasion might be found, after Pushyamitra’s long and eventful reign, possibly in the disturbed and confused period of the later Sungas and Kaṇvas, that is between c. 148 B.C. and the closing years of the first century B.C., provided the Andhras or Śātavāhanas would have presented no obstacle. After Gautamiputra Śri Śātakarni (c. 109 to c. 135 A.C.) came Pulumāyi who is said to have reigned for about thirty years. He came into collision with Rudradāman I, the Śaka Satrap of Ujjain, who took from him most of the territory which Gautamiputra Śri Śātakarni had won from the Kṣaharatas (Girnar inscription); but Gautamiputra Yajña Śri (c. 173 to 202 A.C.) seems to have again defeated the western Satraps and recovered some of the lost provinces. Rudradāman’s aggrandizement is held to have been about 150 A.C. and perhaps, between that date and the date of Yajña Śri’s accession, the Śātavāhanas were not powerful and could not have successfully opposed a southern army in its northward march. With the close of Yajña Śri’s reign, we enter on the third century which, in the words of Mr. Vincent Smith, is one of the dark spaces in the spectrum of Indian history, and almost every event of that time is concealed from view by an impenetrable veil of oblivion. In this dark century too an invasion of North India might have taken place.

\textsuperscript{22} \textit{Ep. Ind.}, VIII, p. 61.

The fourth and the fifth century of the Christian era is the well-known period of the mighty imperial Guptas; and as Dr. Jouveau Dubreuil observes, in his Ancient History of the Deccan, the fifth century is the century of the Vākāṭaka dynasty, which, the learned doctor affirms, is the most glorious and the most important of the dynasties of the Deccan between the third and the sixth century. By the sixth century we are in the period of the powerful Pallavas and Chālukyas who, till the latter were overthrown by the Rāshrakūṭas in 753 A.C., were striving against each other for the mastery of the South. It is clear that the political conditions in the fourth and the succeeding four centuries so far as now known were not at all favourable to an attempt by a Cēra king to invade Northern India; and there is no need to pursue our analysis further. Now if the fire at Madura occurred in August 171 A.C., and therefore Šen-Kuṭṭuvan was ruling then, how would it 23 Early History of India (1924), p. 226.

24 See Ch. IV. A reference in this connection may be made with profit to K. P. Jayaswal's History of India.
agree with the political situation we have been examining? The poem tells us that Sen-Kuṭṭuvan started on his northern expedition on hearing of Kaṇṇaki's apotheosis after the fire, and after he had ascertained through his spies that Nūṟṟuvar Kannar had promised to assist him and desired to maintain friendly relations with him. Nūṟṟuvar Kannar can be no other than Śātakarṇi; and we may conclude that Sen-Kuṭṭuvan and Śātakarṇi entered into a treaty for mutual assistance.

We learn from the poem that Sen-Kuṭṭuvan had been away from his state for thirty-two months, when he was on the bank of the Ganges. We may consequently suppose that about the beginning of 175 A.C. the Cēra king was occupying the bank of the Ganges. This synchronizes with the period when Yajña Śri Śātakarṇi would have been seeking the aid of a friendly power to regain from the Satraps the territory lost by his ancestor Pulumāyi. Thus if we hold that Sen-Kuṭṭuvan was, during a portion of his long reign, contemporaneous with Yajña Śri, we will be able to explain satisfactorily his northern invasion, which, while it served the Cēra's object, must also have afforded material assistance to the Śātakarṇi in vanquishing the Satrap. We are told that at the battle of the Ganges, several northern princes were ranged against Sen-Kuṭṭuvan and his ally; and one of the opposing princes was Vijaya, son of Bālakumāra. I suggest that Bālakumāra is Ptolemy's Baleokouros. I know that it has been suggested by some historians that Baleokouros was probably one of the Śātavāhanas. The surmise may be unfounded; but there can be no doubt that he was historically connected with the Śātavāhanas; and as Ptolemy mentions him in his geography as a contemporary ruling prince, he must have been in existence before 160 A.C. His son may well have been among the princes that opposed Śen-Kuṭṭuvan at the battle of the Ganges. Yajña Śrī himself was according to the Matsyapurāṇa succeeded by a Vijaya; but it is not stated how they were related. Can that Vijaya be the Vijaya mentioned in Śilappadhi-kāram; and if so, was he an usurper, or did he come of a collateral line to which, perhaps, Baleokouros or Bālakumāra belonged? Then, another of the princes that Śen-Kuṭṭuvan defeated at the battle of the Ganges was Rudra; and about this time we have Rudrasimha, if not also Rudrasena of the Satraps, from whom Yajña Śrī must have recovered his lost territory. My suggestion is that the battle of the Ganges was fought by Yajña Śrī and his ally against the forces of the Satraps and their allies.

There is also another important synchronism that has to be considered; for, Śilappadhi-kāram informs us that among the various kings that attended the consecration of the image of Pattini-dēvi, Gajabāhu, the king of Ceylon, was one. According to the Mahāvamsa, Gajabāhu was reigning between A.C. 173 and 191. The Rājavali says that Gajabāhu took with him some relics of Pattini-dēvi to Ceylon; and this lends material corroboration to the statement in the poem that on his return Gajabāhu ordered a shrine to be constructed and an annual festival to be celebrated in his dominion in honour of Pattini-Kaḍavuḷ or Pattini-dēvi. This account enables us to explain the hold that the tradition of Pattini-dēvi, the ‘wife-goddess’, has long had on the people of Ceylon, where as Dr. A. K. Commaraswamy observes some of the images in temples that depict the old art of that island are those of the apotheosised wife.

25 Ch. 273, 15.

S. 6. Conclusion.

Thus we see that 171 A.C. as the date of the fire at Madura satisfies the test afforded by a consilience of results; and we may therefore reasonably conclude that Śen-Kuṭṭuvan who was then the king of the Cēra kingdom must be assigned to the second century A.C.; and as according to Silappadhikāram he had been fifty years on the throne when he built and consecrated the temple of Pattini-dēvi, his reign must have begun in the first quarter of that century. It may be noted that the remarkable concurrency of testimony between Sangam works and the Periplus on the conditions of maritime trade in the Indian seas considerably strengthens this conclusion. The latest attempt to determine the chronology of the Sangam is by Mr. K. N. Sivaraja Pillai, sometime senior lecturer in Tamil in the University of Madras, in his recent book The Chronology of the Early Tamils. Mr. Sivaraja Pillai has scant faith in the historical sense of those who have worked on the basis of the Śen-Kuṭṭuvan-Gajabāhu synchronism, because forsooth Śilappadhi-kāram and Mahāvamsa, are likely to twist and pervert historical facts as the result of artistic and religious motives.

---

I have always held that the Śen-Kuṭṭuvan-Gajabāhu synchronism cannot be lightly rejected, simply because these two works are not professedly works of secular history. Such rejection of relevant evidence on a priori grounds is not sound; and the scientific inquirer must be prepared to accept light from whatever source it may proceed. The value of synchronism in fixing dates in early Indian history is well known. I cannot reject the Śen-Kuṭṭuvan-Gajabāhu synchronism as fanciful. Gajabāhu is seen to have been reigning between 173 and 195 A.C.; and we may reasonably postulate that the building and consecration of the temple was about 176 A.C. As Śen-Kuṭṭuvan had been on the throne for 50 years when he built the temple, he may be held to have ascended the throne about 125 A.C. In our present state of knowledge, I have no hesitation in regarding this as the ‘sheet anchor’ of early South Indian history; and I am strengthened in this view by the result arrived at by Mr. Sivaraja Pillai, who had conducted the inquiry along lines which he claims to be more reliable and less objectionable. I have already stated that Śen-Kuṭṭuvan helped Nalam-Killi-Śēṭ-Cenni to gain the throne of the Cōla kingdom; and the synchronistic table accompanying Mr. Pillai’s book assigns this Cōla to the period 100 to 125 A.C. Śēṭ-Cenni’s period may as well be 125 to 150 A.C., for Mr. Pillai’s date is only conjectural, after all. When we remember that in that table the conventional 25 years’ period for each king is what is adopted, the coincidence between our results will be admitted to be remarkable. As the Śangam period did not obviously begin and close with the reign of Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, but there were several generations of kings and poets of the Śangam age both before and after him, we may for the present hold as a safe hypothesis that the Śangam epoch covered the first three centuries of the Christian era. This is the view I have all along maintained; and this is the considered conclusion of the late Mr. Kanakasabhai. This is also the view adopted by Dr. Krishnaswami Aiyangar and Prof. Nilakanta Sastri in their works and in the Cambridge History of India.

28 See also Dikshitar, Studies in Tamil Literature and History, Ch. I.
CHAPTER VIII.

Chronology of the Śangam Cērās.

I propose to take 125 A.C. as the first year of Śen-Kuṭṭuvan’s reign, and with that as the starting point ascertain, with the help of the materials at our disposal, the dates of Śen-Kuṭṭuvan’s predecessors and successors.

According to Patirrup-pattu, the following kings had, before Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, reigned for the period mentioned against each.

Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan 58 years.
Palyānai Šelkelu-Kuṭṭuvan 25 years.
Kaḷankāik-kaṇṭi Nārmudiccēral 25 years.

So, counting back from 125 A.C., the year when Śen-Kuṭṭuvan’s reign commenced, we see Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan must have begun his reign in c. 17 A.C., Palyānai Šelkelu-Kuṭṭuvan in c. 75 A.C. and Kaḷankāik-kaṇṭi Nārmudiccēral in c. 100 A.C.; and if we, for the present, assign to Vānavaramban Udiyan-Cēralātan the conventional 25 years, which cannot, having regard to the character of his reign, be held to be an exaggerated estimate, that king must on this basis be regarded as commencing his reign in about 8 B.C. It must be confessed that the acceptance of these terms of years does present some difficulty. It may be asked: If Imayavaramban reigned for fifty-eight years, at what age did his brother become king after him? Palyānai Śelkelu-Kuṭṭuvan must be at least about 60 when his reign commenced; and his age must have been 85 when he passed away. Such ripe old age may be uncommon, but is certainly not unknown, as a reference to Kushana, Gupta and Pallava history will show. For instance, Kuzulo Kadphises ruled for nearly 55 years,¹ and was over eighty, when he died and was succeeded by his son Wima Kadphises who reigned for 30 years;² and after him followed the great Kaniṣka whose reign covered not less than 45 years. Nandi-Varman Pallavamalla reigned for nearly sixty-five years (715-780 A.C.) and his son Dantivarman, who succeeded him, reigned for fifty years (780-830).³ In recent history, we may instance William I who became King of Prussia in his 64th year and Emperor of Germany in his 74th year and lived to be 91 years old. The Ex-German Emperor William II, who ascended the throne in 1888, is now 76 years old. Frederick the Great of Prussia reigned for 46 years, and was 74, when he died. Queen Victoria reigned for 64 years and was 82 when she passed away. Edward VII succeeded her, when he was about 60 years of age; and George V, the Silver Jubilee of whose reign was celebrated 1 Rapson's Ancient India, p. 185.

2 Sten Konow, I.H.Q., III.
3 Cambridge Shorter History of India.
last year, passed away in his 71st year. The advanced age of Palyānai Šelkešu-Kuṭṭūvan need not present any difficulty, and it would afford another very cogent reason for the institution of a viceroyalty in the northern province during his reign.

There is another difficulty which we cannot ignore. If Šen-Kuṭṭūvan was the son of Imayavaramban, he must have been, at the lowest calculation, over fifty years of age, when he became sovereign of the Čēra Kingdom; and if we accept the statement that he ruled for fifty-five years, he must have been something more than a centenarian when he died. Nor can we construe the statement in the patigam to mean only that he lived for fifty-five years; for that will give to his reign not more than five years' duration! The only resolution of the tangle that suggests itself to me is to take that Šen-Kuṭṭūvan was not a son, but was a grandson of Imayavaramban. I venture to suggest that Neḍum-Cēralātan in the Patigam of fifth Patirrōp-pattu, means only 'the great Cēralātan', the king referred to being Kaḷankāikaṇṇi Nārmudic-Cēral. I do not forget the passage in Silappadhikāram which describes Šen-Kuṭṭūvan as āmēḻ ānēḻi mēnāvākān ānēḻi cērala. Here the expression ērāpō need not necessarily mean son; it may denote a descendant. From the narration of Iḷankō-Adigaḷ's early history, where Dēvanti praises his self-sacrifice in favour of Sen-Kuṭṭuvan, by taking holy orders⁴ that the latter may become king, we can see that Sen-Kuṭṭuvan’s father has only two sons, Sen-Kuṭṭuvan and Ḫankō-Adīgal, and the setting given to the incident there related completely negatives the existence of other sons. This to my mind, is significant as making it impossible that Sen-Kuṭṭuvan could be one of four sons of Imayavaramban, as is now usually believed. Two things are clear from this incident; and they are that when Sen-Kuṭṭuvan’s father’s reign was about to close, he had only two sons and immediately on the death of the father, one of the two sons and not the brother stood to succeed him. I propose, therefore, to regard Sen-Kuṭṭuvan as the son of Nārmuḍic-Cēral. At any rate, the construction I suggest will remove the almost insuperable difficulties we have to encounter, if we regard Sen-Kuṭṭuvan as a son of Imayavaramban, as is now usually done. If this interpretation is accepted, the duration given for Sen-Kuṭṭuvan’s reign may be allowed to stand. Roughly then, Udiyan Cēral’s reign may be held to have begun about 8 B.C. or practically at the beginning of the 1st century, and Sen-Kuṭṭuvan’s to have terminated about 180 A.C.

In the main or Vaṇci line, we have seen that there are five kings after Sen-Kuṭṭuvan and in the absence of any material for ascertaining how long they reigned, we may provisionally regard them as representing five generations, and thus bring the story of the kings of that line to the close of the third century of the Christian era. In the northern line, we read about ten kings; and of these, we see from Patirrup-pattu that four kings reigned for 96 years in the aggregate. For the remaining six, even if we assign to each of them only twenty years on the average, their reigns may be taken to have occupied 120 years, so that practically we have the story of that line for over two centuries. As I have explained before, there is good reason to think that that line began in the later years of Palyānai Šelkeļu-Kuṭṭuvan’s reign, that is, some years before the close of the first century A.C.; and so, we have the story of the northern Cēras also up to the close of the third century A.C. During these three centuries, the Cēras were brought into relation with the Cōlas and the Pāṇḍyās very often; and from the Puranānūru lyrics, we can identify most of them. The following statements give the pedigree, the probable dates and contemporaneity of the Cēras of the two branches, and the names of the Cōlas and Pāṇḍyās, whose periods more or less synchronised with theirs. It is needless to say that the tables cannot pretend to be strictly accurate; but they are the best that can be constructed from the materials, and are tentatively offered as acceptable.

⁴ Śilap. 30, ll. 170 seq.
CÉRAS OF VAŃCI

1. Vānavaramban.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Udiyan-Cēral. (c. 17 A.C.)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

2. Imayavaramban. (c. 17—75 A.C.)

3. Paḷiyānal Ṣelkeḷu Kûṭṭuvan.

(c. 75—100 A.C.)

4. Naṟmudī-Cēral. (c. 100—125 A.C.)

5. Śen-Kûṭṭuvan. (c. 125—180 A.C.)

6. Kûṭṭuvan-Kōdal. (c. 180—205 A.C.)

7. Iḷam-Kûṭṭuvan. (c. 205—230 A.C.)

8. Pāḷapāṭīya Perum-Kaḍumkō. (c. 230—255 A.C.)

9. Mā-Vepkō. (c. 255—280 A.C.)

10. Vaṅcan. (c. 280—305 A.C.)

---

5 Does Cēramān Vaṅcan simply mean the Cēramān who ruled at Vaṅci? If so, the name of this Cēramān is missing.
CÉRAS OF TONDI LINE

1. Karuvūr-ēpiya Perum-Cēral Irumporai (c. 90—100 A.C.)

2. Antuvan-Cēral Irumporai (c. 100—120 A.C.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>3. Ādu-kōṭ-pāṭtu Cēralātan (c. 120—158 A.C.)</th>
<th>4. Selva-Kaṭumkō-Vāliyātan (c. 158—183 A.C.)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5. Perum-Cēral Irumporai (c. 183—200 A.C.)</td>
<td>6. Ijam-Cēral Irumporai (c. 200—216 A.C.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7. Ātan-Avinti (c. 216-235 A.C.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8. Yānai-kaṭ-gēy Mantaram-Cēral Irumporai (c. 236—266 A.C.)</td>
<td>9. Kō-Kōda Mārpan (c. 266—286 A.C.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10. Kapaitkkāl Irumporai (c. 286—306 A.C.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cēras of Vańci</td>
<td>Cēras of Tońdi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---------------</td>
<td>---------------</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| 1. Vānavaramban
Udiyan-Cēral | 1. Karuvūrēriya
Perum-Cēral |
| 2. Imayavaramban
Neḏum-Cēralātan |
3. Ādukōtpāṭṭu
Cēralātan |
| 4. Nārmuṇḍic-Cēral | 4. Śelvak-Kaḍumkō
Vāli-Ātan |
| 5. Śen-Kuṭṭuvan | 6. Kuṭṭuvan Kōdai or
Mā-Kōdai |
| 7. Ilam-Kuṭṭuvan | 5. Perum-Cēral
Irumporai |
| 8. Pālaipādiya Perum-Kaḍumkō | 6. Ilam-Cēral
Irumporai |
| 9. Mā-Venkō | 7. Ātan Avini
8. Yānaikaṭsēy
Māntaran-Cēral |
| | 10. Kaṇaikkkāl
Irumporai |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Colas.</th>
<th>Pandyas.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Pourmaikkō Peru-Narkilli.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pourmaikkō Peru-Narkilli.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muṣittalai Kōperu-Narkilli</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uruvapahēr Iḷam-śet-Cenni</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karikāla Cōla</td>
<td>Āriyappadai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nalamkili Śet-Cenni</td>
<td>Kaḍanta.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ne đuṅjeliyan.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Veṟrivēr Šeligyan.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rājasūyam Vēṭṭa Perunarkilli</td>
<td>Ugra-Peruvaluti.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kulamurraṭṭutuṅciya Killi Valavan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Šen-Kaṅnān</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
We have now pieced together the story of the earliest Cēra kings known to Tamil literature. The antiquity of the Cēra kingdom is beyond dispute. From the occurrence of Cēra-pādaḥ in Taittiriya Āraṇyaka, Mr. P. T. Srinivasa Aiyangar concludes that the Cēra country had even in that long distant past come under the influence of Brahmanical or Aryan rites and rituals,¹ and he cites the authority of Prof. A. B. Keith for construing the expression as relating to the Cēras. Perhaps this is doubtful, as Sāyana takes Cēra to mean snake. Leaving this aside, as also the evidence of the Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyana, we have in more recent times inscriptive evidence of the existence of an independent Cēra kingdom afforded by the Gīrnar inscription of Aśoka of c. 250 B.C. which mentions the country of Kēraḷaputra as one of the southern kingdoms. With one possible exception, Tamil literature, however, does not take us to that distant period in the history of South India, though it is clear from Tolkāppiyam that at the date of that ancient work the Cēra kingdom had been in existence for a long time. The exception is this.

¹ History of the Tamils, p. 29.
There are references to the Mōriyar in Aganānūru² and in those poems, the passage of their war-chariots through a mountain-pass, which possibly had been thought to be impassable, receives prominent mention. It is also clear from Agam 281, that the objective of the Mōriyar army was South India; and that the Naḍukar, (literally ‘northerners’) a ferocious people³ probably formed the van-guard. It has been suggested that the reference in these poems is to a Mauryan invasion.⁴ If so, the alleged Mauryan advance must have occurred before Aśoka; for Aśoka tells us that the Tamil kingdoms of the South were politically free; and there is no possibility of a Mauryan invasion after his time. Tārānāth, the Tibetan historian, speaks of Bindusāra’s conquests in the Dekhan and South India; and perhaps, the Aganānūru lyrics refer to one of those invasions, as I suggested many years ago.⁵ Or possibly, Mōriyar is not the correct reading;⁶ and if so, the reference would be, as suggested by me elsewhere,⁷ to a southerly march into ² Agam, 69; 251; 281.

---
³ Agam, 107 and 381.
⁴ The latest writer on the subject, Mr. V. R. Ramachandra Dikshitar takes this view in his book "The Mauryan Polity", pp. 58—61. My own view is that the alleged Mauryan invasion is a myth.
⁵ Date of Śilappadhikāram: Madras Christian College Magazine, 1917.
⁶ Cf. Puram, 175.
⁷ Kōśar and Vamba Mōriyar. Q.J.M.S., 1924.
India, through a north-eastern pass of the Himalayas, of a trans-Himalayan martial tribe at some remote period. However, to whatever occurrence the passages in Agananūru may refer, they do not relate to the Cēra kingdom; and the account we have been able to gather from the Sangam works about the 'Cēra kingdom, does not take us earlier than the first century of the Christian era.

Let us try to get a glimpse of the political, social and religious background of the Cēra history of this period as presented by Sangam literature. It is clear that the rules of Hindu or Aryan polity mainly governed the administration. There is abundant evidence to show that the enunciation of the three-fold duties of the king given in the Mānavadharma Śāstra was followed. The king was an indispensable institution; and his authority rested on Dharma of which he was the guardian. Emphasis is laid on his position as a father of his people. It is the duty of the king to know and remember that he is the source of the life of the world, and not cereals and water.

Hereditary monarchy seems to have been the prevailing form of government. We read

8 VII, 88.
9 Puram, 55. பரம மனு வந்த சாந்தமணி காரணம்.
10 Ibid., 5. காண மறுகிஏ சுற்றிய மக்களின்.
11 Ibid., 186. காண மறுகிஏ குறுப்பந்தி பிறவுவியங்கை சுற்றுக்கி மக்களின்.
of no disputed succession or civil war in the Cēra kingdom during the period we have studied, though during this period there were instances in the Cōla kingdom. The King was essentially an absolute monarch, but he respected and followed the wise counsel of Ministers and other learned men. He extended equal protection and justice to all his subjects.¹² The minister was a responsible officer; and the unsympathetic and tyrannical minister who misleads the kings to oppress the people is denounced even by the royal poet Pālaipādiya-Perum-Kaṭuṅṅkō. Thus, in Pālaik-kali,¹³ he likens the scorching sun of the sandy deserts to ‘a king, who by a minister bad, unsympathetic and unjust, is led’; and in Pālai 9, he writes that the desolate region of the desert is

Like a land where the ministers fleece without scruple
And grind without mercy the people who groan
Under crushing misrule.

The minister’s position was obviously delicate, and he could not be always certain of the king’s favour. Thus in Pālai 7, we read—

The minister who in the sunshine basks
Of royal favour, working still with zeal
But for his master’s good, without regard
For his own benefit, doth sudden fall
Under displeasure and he loses all!

¹² Puram, 17 and 55.
¹³ See Pālai, 7.
From the occurrence of the expressions சுவாத்தாய் and மகன் in some ancient works like Śilappadhikāram, Maṇimēkalai and Perum-kadai, some scholars have committed themselves to the view that in the Śangam period government was conducted with the aid of popular assemblies and representative councils. This is an entirely fanciful view. A reference to Divākaram for the meaning of these terms would conclusively show that these groups connoted well-known adjuncts to royalty or royal paraphernalia.\textsuperscript{14} They comprised ministers, purohits, army captains, embassage, spies, astrologers, near relations, citizens, and various denominations of soldiers. The ideal king was a benevolent autocrat, and the people were devoted to him, under whose protection they were able to follow their pursuits in peace. Ancient Tamil literature does not seem to record any instance of resistance to the will of the king by his subjects; and in those ancient days, the fundamental value and importance of peace between the ruler and his people was also prominently recognized. Thus we read in the Kūṟaḷ:

"Blest though the land in all things else, it naught avails
If there's no peace between the people and the King."

—Kūṟaḷ, 740.

\textsuperscript{14} Vide also Maṇi. p. 10 foot-note.
The effective protection of his people is stressed in Sangam literature as the essential function of the king. Whether for the satisfactory discharge of that essential function or from motives of personal ambition, or from sheer irresistible blood-lust, kings often indulged in war, and not infrequently in such excess that learned men seeking their bounty felt compelled to remind them that peace had its victories no less renowned than war.\textsuperscript{15} Almost every great king of the Sangam period appears to have been a great warrior, and the Cēra monarchs were no exception. Necessarily, they maintained armies of well-equipped soldiers, who wore defensive armours (\textit{ஓவியையூரை}) and were armed with bows and arrows, spears and swords, and used shields made of tough bull-hide.\textsuperscript{16} Before starting for war, elaborate sacrifice to \textit{Korlavai},\textsuperscript{17} the Dravidian \textit{Durgā}, and the presiding deity of the war-drum was made.\textsuperscript{18} The kings themselves often led their armies in person in the field of battle; and the first act of provocation by an invading army seems to have been the felling of the \textit{Kāval-maram} or totem tree of the enemy from the encircling woods.\textsuperscript{19} The lifting of the enemy's \textsuperscript{15} Cf. \textit{Puram}, 5.

\textsuperscript{16} \textit{Patiṟṟup-pattu}, 45.
\textsuperscript{17} Literally ‘The Goddess of Victory’.
\textsuperscript{18} \textit{Patiṟṟup-pattu}, 30; \textit{Patigam III}.
\textsuperscript{19} \textit{Puram}, 36.
cattle was also a prelude to war.\textsuperscript{20} The forts were well guarded and the gates secured with bolts of tough wood;\textsuperscript{21} and the fortifications were surrounded by moats filled with water.\textsuperscript{22} On the field, the kings used war-chariots; and besides foot-soldiers, they employed horses and elephants in war.\textsuperscript{23} Appalling slaughter, and utter devastation and destruction by fire followed in the wake of war,\textsuperscript{24} and frequently personal humiliation, often brutally vindictive, were inflicted on the vanquished foe and even on his women-folk.\textsuperscript{25} Indeed, showing clemency to a vanquished enemy evoked surprise and wonder.\textsuperscript{26} The souls of heroes slain in battle were believed to attain \textit{Vira svarga}, which corresponds to the Valhalla of Gothic mythology; and so firmly was this notion rooted that among the warrior clan, a still-born child was cleft in twain at birth that it might attain ‘the heroes’ heaven’.\textsuperscript{27} The hero could not bear to receive a wound on the back in the field of battle; and he atoned for the disgrace by self-immolation by starvation on the scene.\textsuperscript{28}

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{20} Agam, 372.
\item \textsuperscript{21} Puram, 20.
\item \textsuperscript{22} Ibid., 14 and 37.
\item \textsuperscript{23} Ibid., 14.
\item \textsuperscript{24} Patirrup-pattu, 25, 26, 43 and 48.
\item \textsuperscript{25} Ibid., V Patigam.
\item \textsuperscript{26} Patirrup-pattu, 32.
\item \textsuperscript{27} Puram, 74.
\item \textsuperscript{28} Ibid., 65.
\end{itemize}
It is interesting to note that in those days, the martial spirit animated not only the men, but also the women of the land. At a time of war, the women-folk urged their male relations to march to battle, resolved to win or die like heroes. The wife rejoiced to see her husband display his valour, and the mother was proud of her son who showed his bravery; and neither was troubled by the thought of any possible danger to the life of her hero. They regarded a dastard in war with contempt. Puram 278, given below, depicts vividly this significant trait in the character of the ancient Tamil dame.

The dame of ancient age, with shrunken veins,
And loosely hanging tissues, heard her son
Had from the battle turned in fear and fled.
In towering rage she vowed, if that be so,
She would for very shame cut off her breasts
That gave the despicable coward suck.
She snatched a sword, swept with impetuous speed
Into the gory battle-field, and searched.
The heaps of warriors slain, when lo! she found Stretched on the field of glory, cut in twain,
Her valiant son. Then swelled, indeed, with pride
The mother's heart, which was with gladness filled, Intenser far than when she gave him birth!

Purap-poruł-Venbā-Mālai, the author of which is a Cēra, gives the grammar of warfare as understood in ancient Tamil India; and we see from it that the approved rule was that the invading army should not molest the enemy's cattle, which before the battle began, should be 28a Cf. Puram, 277; 279; 295; 86. removed to a place of safety. The rules also enjoined that the invading army should—

Spare the temples where sacrifices are offered;
Spare the consecrated dwellings of the ascetics;
Spare the residence of the holy Vedic Brahmanas.

It is seen that the vanquished king was sometimes kept in confinement as a prisoner by the victor, possibly in expectation of suitable ransom. 29

S. 3.

Watered by perennial streams, the Cēra country was very fertile, and its prosperity was maintained by the Cēra kings. A large proportion of the population pursued agriculture; but other occupations, such as fishing and hunting were also followed. Arts, trade and commerce were also pursued. The Cēra Kings, as Kuṟumkōliyur-Kilār, writes in Puṟam 17—

Their royal sceptre even held
O'er all their subjects, where-so-e'er they lived,
In hill or mountain, forest or in town;
Protecting them with equal justice, they
Chastised all wrong, and as their due, received
The share of yield from land by law allowed.

This share is explained by the commentator to be one-sixth, the Ṣadbhāga of the Dharmāsāstra and the Arthasastra. Among the industries pursued in the country, were spinning and weaving. Spinning cotton was an occupation of women,\textsuperscript{30} who also prepared beaten rice (கோட்டை) with wooden pestles (ஞைக்கால்).\textsuperscript{31} Besides cotton cloth, also silk was woven,\textsuperscript{32} and they were of superior quality. Files, axes and other iron implements and metal-lamps supported by metal-stand were produced,\textsuperscript{33} and jewellery in gold, silver and precious stones were made.\textsuperscript{34} Carpentry and work in hides also flourished. We have definite mention that hides were fashioned into shields for the use of soldiers in battles,\textsuperscript{35} cut into thongs and circlets for use in Yāgas\textsuperscript{36} and into straps which were 'stitched with ease and dexterity for cots' by cobblers.\textsuperscript{37} Salt was manufactured in salt-pan and carried in carts for sale.\textsuperscript{38} There was also extensive trade in fish\textsuperscript{39} in which fish-women took an active part. The land grew spices, especially pepper, which was much sought after in the western world,\textsuperscript{40} and it abounded in \textsuperscript{30} Puram, 125.

\textsuperscript{31} Pāṭirṛupa-pattu, 29.
\textsuperscript{32} Ibid., 12.
\textsuperscript{33} Puram 36; and Pāṭirṛupa-pattu, 47 and 52.
\textsuperscript{34} Puram 66; Pāṭirṛupa-pattu, 16.
\textsuperscript{35} Pāṭirṛupa-pattu, 45.
\textsuperscript{36} Ibid., 74.
\textsuperscript{37} Puram, 82.
\textsuperscript{38} Ncytal, 21; Nṛ. 4; Agam, 119; 310; and Kurun., 165.
\textsuperscript{39} Puram, 343.
\textsuperscript{40} Agam., 149.
cocoanut palms,\textsuperscript{41} sandal-wood, \textit{Agil} and sugarcane.\textsuperscript{42} Its elephants gave ivory; its mines yielded precious stones and its seas yielded pearls.\textsuperscript{43} The country was beyond doubt very flourishing and wealthy.

S. 4.

Ship-building industry does not appear to be mentioned in Sangam works; but the people of the Cēra country were familiar with navigation of the high seas\textsuperscript{44} and from early times they had trade relations with foreign nations. We have evidence that in the very dim past, the rare products of Malabar found their way to Babylon and Egypt, and later the Phoenicians controlled the spice trade of Malabar. Chinese junks were also attracted to the ports of the Cēra country, with which it seems obvious the trade relations of the Chinese, which probably began long before the ships of Greece and Rome called at the Cēra ports, must have continued for a long time; and from the architecture of the buildings on the Malabar coast, which reproduces the distinctive features of the architecture of Mongolian countries, particularly in its temples, one may conclude that a Chinese colony had been established, where, as generally happened with people living \textsuperscript{41} Puram, 17.

\textsuperscript{42} Patirrup-pattu, 87.
\textsuperscript{43} Ibid., 67.
\textsuperscript{44} Pālai, 4; Mani, IV, ll. 29—34.
in an alien land, the Chinese settlers lived in houses built in the style of their native country. To my mind the Mongolian curves and the upturned caves and gables that we see in Travancore houses and temples supply strong evidence of Chinese influence which must have sprung from Chinese trade relationship with the Cēra country.

With the discovery of Hippalus about the beginning of the first century of the Christian era, that, by taking advantage of the monsoon winds, ships could sail straight from the Red Sea and reach India in 40 days, a new era in the commercial activity of the Cēra kingdom was inaugurated. The direction of the wind led the ships straight to Musiri which Pliny described as the nearest mart in India. The Pāṭirṇup-pattu and Pūranānāru poems bear eloquent testimony to the commercial activity of Musiri and other ports of the Cēra kingdom; and we are told that in exchange for gold that foreign vessels brought, they took home pepper and other valuable products from those ports. To what extent trade in pepper and other products was carried on with Rome will appear from the words of Pliny who says: ‘In no year does India drain us of less than 550,000,000 sestereces, giving back her own wares which are sold among us at fully 100 times their first cost.’ Large quantities of Roman gold and silver came into the Cēra kingdom, as the result of export of pepper to Rome, and thousands of Roman coins, mostly of the reigns of Augustus, Tiberius, Gaius and Claudius, have been discovered on the Malabar coast, and in the districts of Madura and Coimbatore. The trade at the Cēra ports was so extensive, that warehouses had to be erected. We notice from Pliny that in his days (c. 50 A.C.) a safer and more convenient port than Musiri was Barake, to which pepper was brought down the river in dugouts or boats scooped out of a single tree from Kottanāra (Kuṭṭa-nāḍu). Barake has now been rightly identified with Porakad, south of Alleppey. By the time of the Periplus, however, Musiri, modern Cranganore, had become the gate of India, and the foremost port for foreign trade.

Indeed, in the days of the Periplus, it was a very busy port. The author of the Periplus says that from this port were purchased pepper, pearls, ivory, silk, spikenard, malabathram (Skt. Tamālapatra), transparent stones like beryl, diamonds and rubies, and tortise shell; and according to Mr. Schoff, the latest translator of the Periplus, pepper supplied, perhaps, three-fourth of the total bulk 45 See Warmington "Commerce between Rome and India", Chap. 7.

46 Patirīṟup-pattu, 55.
47 The credit of this identification belongs to Mr. I. C. Chakko, a former Director of Industries, Travancore. Is Nilcynda the present Nindakara, just north of Quilon?
of the average west-bound cargo. Pliny’s language is almost furious when he writes of the import of pepper into Rome. He says: “It is quite surprising that the use of pepper has come so much into fashion, seeing that it is sometimes by their substance and sometimes by their appearance that articles attract our notice; whereas pepper has nothing in it that can plead as a recommendation to either fruit or berry, its only desirable quality being a certain pungency; and yet it is for this that we import it all the way from India! Who was the first to make a trial of it as an article of food? And who, I wonder, was the man that was not content to prepare himself by hunger only for the satisfying of a greedy appetite?”

In spite of such strictures, the Roman import trade in pepper grew; and we are told that when Alaric the Visigoth laid seige to Rome, among the terms he offered for raising the seige was the immediate payment of 3,000 lbs. of pepper. It is clear from the accounts that there was flourishing foreign trade on an international scale at the port of Musiri. Besides pepper, pearl was another important export from South India; and about the craze for pearls in Rome, Pliny writes: “Our ladies glory in having pearls suspended from their fingers, two or three of them dangling from their ears, delighted even with the rattling of the pearls as they knock against each other; and now, at the present time, the poor classes are even affecting them. They put them on their feet, and that, not only on the laces of their sandals, but all over the shoes.” He mentions Lollia Paulina, the wife of the Emperor Caius, who was seen on an ordinary betrothal-wearing pearls to the value of 40,000,000 sesterces or roughly £333,000!

There is thus remarkable concurrence of testimony, as already stated, between the Śāngam works and the Periplus on the commercial activity of the ports of the Cēra country; and at these sea-ports there were warehouses maintained for storing foreign merchandise.48 It is interesting to note that the valuable products of the country were sold to foreign merchants for gold;49 while apparently paddy was adopted as the usual measure of value for internal trade. Thus in Puṟam 343, we learn that fish was bartered for paddy. There were recognized measures for measuring paddy (அரியில் குளுகை குளவல்) and tribute paid in paddy, we read, was measured into the state granaries.51 Apparently, metallic currency alone was employed in foreign trade.

S. 5.

The Tamils appear to have been a brave, warm-hearted and warm-blooded people who

48 Patirrup-pattu, 55; 67 and 74.
49 Agam, 149 and Puṟam, 343.
50 Patirrup-pattu, 66 and 71.
51 Ibid., 66.
cared much for the mere joys of living. They cultivated poetry, music and dancing. Their staple food was rice; but fish and meat were also used. They had almost a partiality for palm-wine. One might say that, perhaps, wine and women, war and song, largely claimed the attention of at least the leisured classes in those early days. The Čera kings liberally patronized poetry and song, and were easily accessible to poets and singers. These came from both sexes and from all castes and classes; and they were all very munificently rewarded without distinction of caste, creed or sex. The author of the ‘History of the Tamils’ cynically observes:—"Besides protecting his subjects, the only other function of Rajas was to be surrounded by beggar bards, who eulogized them in their poems and were plied with food and drink as reward." 52 There seems to be some warrant for the last statement, afforded by Patirrup-pattu, 43, lines 34 and 35, which run as follows:—

but there is ample evidence that the bards were also more substantially rewarded. The variety of Yāls mentioned in Śangam literature, and the institution of pānar indisputably show that the times and conditions were specially favourable for the art of music to flourish.

52 Page 191.
Minstrelsy was much patronized not only in courts but also in urban life; and we read of special adaptations of musical instruments for entertainment in rural areas. Sangam poetry is full of life and colour, and affords a faithful mirror of ancient Tamil Society. It may be noted that several Cēra kings and other members of the Cēra royal family occupy an honoured place among the Sangam poets.

Adult marriage was the normal rule among the ancient Tamils. From Tolkēppiyam it is seen that the approved form of marital union was of the nature of what is known amongst Sanskrit law-givers as the gāndharva form of marriage. It consisted in voluntary union in secrecy from reciprocal desire; and Tamil usage required no religious rite to give it validity. Tolkēppiyam explains that in course of time the sanctity of Kaḻavu or secret union was violated by deceitfulness and treachery; and so Aryans or learned men—Aiyar is the term employed and it is either a corruption of Āryar or is a derivative from உரு ('Tolkappiyam) and denotes ‘men who evoke admiration’—enjoined the rule of Kaṟpu or open marriage, following the usage of the higher classes (Mēn-makkaḷ), and thus publicity, which distinguishes a recognized marriage from an illicit connection or concubinage, was secured to the union. Kaṟpu consisted in the bride being given away in marriage by her parents or other relations; and it was usually a convention that concluded the relation that had begun and had continued for some time in the Kaḷavu form. It is interesting to note that the approved forms of marriage according to the Sanskrit Smṛtis were regarded by the Tamils as inappropriate or unapproved marital unions—Poruntā-k-kānam. Sometimes the bride-groom was chosen by a trial of strength in bull fight (mullai 9) and occasionally bride-price was paid. 54 When the choice of a husband by the parents happened to be different from a woman’s own choice, she over-reached them by eloping with her lover, 55 a procedure which custom recognized. An unsuccessful wooer often succeeded in getting his sweet-heart to marry him, by having recourse to maḍal-ēral, which consisted in his wearing a wreath of senna (avirai) and madar flowers and going about in a vehicle of palmyra fronds, beseeching public sympathy and help. 56

53 Tol: karpiyal, 3 and 4.

There was no rule against polygamy; and concubinage seems to have been prevalent, 54 Nar., 300.

55 Pālai, 8 and Agam, 153.
especially in urban areas, Maruta-nilam, where a life of ease and luxury, wealth and pleasure was possible. The frequent mention in Agam literature of hetae and their influence shows that they formed a recognized institution, in early Tamil society; and we read that they used also to throng at festivals, where acting and dancing prevailed. The danseuse not infrequently acted as a procuress. The following extract from Marutak-kali voices the piteous complaint of a faithful wife addressed to her husband guilty of marital disloyalty.

Hard-hearted, long hast thou forsaken me!
My beauty’s wasted; and my eyes have known
No sleep! And if unable to sit up,
I seek my couch at times to close my eyes,
The sounding drums that do announce each day
Thy visit to thy artful courtesans,
Who fragrant garlands wear, prevent my rest!
Thou hast neglected me! my weeping eyes,
Deprived of sleep so long, seek transient rest,
Comforted by my darling’s son’s caress;
The merry song thy youthful mistresses
Sing as they dance in jollity in homes
Thou hast provided, drives such rest away!

—Marutam, 5.

Though there is overwhelming evidence in Sangam literature of the husband’s infidelity to his wife, the ancient Tamil wife apparently never swerved from loyalty to her husband even in very trying circumstances. The following

---

57 Agam, 326 and 222.
58 Naṟṟ, 310.
OF THE ŠANGAM PERIOD

poem from Pālaikkali is illustrative of the typical Tamil wife of those days.

Thou tellst me the desert is so parched
For utter want of rain that the wild deer
On prickly cactus plant is forced to feed;
And, by the shafts of heartless robbers pierced,
Wayfarers in that arid region lie
Writhing with thirst which they attempt to slake
With tears that trickle to their dried-up tongues!
My lord and husband! Thou dost not, perhaps,
My nature comprehend. It is not meet
Thou shouldst our bond thus disregard and go!
To go with thee and in thy journey share
With thee the perils of the desert track,
Know that alone can give me happiness!

—Pōlai, 5.

When the husband left on a long journey, the wife kept count of the number of days he was away by making marks on a wall, a method of keeping count of days then common as it is even now in some villages.

Women were very fond of jewels, and this trait was so pronounced in their nature, that even in Šangam literature they came to be referred to, by metonomy as Čṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟṟ்ட் and Čṟṟṟṟ்ட். Besides ordinary jewels like bangles, anklets, belts, rings, etc., there was in use a jewel fashioned like or made of tiger’s teeth which

59 Agam, 351.
60 Agam, 61 and 289.
61 Puram, 3 and Patirppu-pattu, 65 and 88.
62 Neytal, 22.
ladies wore along with the tāli. 63 Music and dance were cultivated; and there were professional minstrels called pān̄ar and virali and dancers. In Marutam 14, we read of ‘the circlet which accomplished dancers wear on their fair forehead, when they appear upon the stage’. Among musical instruments frequent mention is made of the shepherd’s reed 64 and the seven stringed Yāl, 65 which from its synonym 66 may, perhaps, be thought to have been shaped like a plough. Collyrium was used by women; and men smeared themselves with sandal-paste and wore garlands of flowers and strings of pearls.

S. 6.

Fasts and ceremonial baths were common. 67 It is clear that belief in omens and astrology was general. For example, Kākkai-paḍiniyār Nacchelaiyār writes in Kuruntokai 210 that the cawing of the crow presages the arrival of a guest, 68 a belief that exists even now in Tamil villages. It is due to this circumstance that the term Kākkai-paḍiniyār is prefixed to her name.

63 ṉamperuṟṟuṟṟuṇam paṇ̄ar viraḷi Agam, 7.
Even now tiger-claws cased in gold are used as jewel for children.

64 Cf. Neytal, 13 and 14.
65 Cf. Pālai, 8.
66 Cf. Puram, 206. (Commentator’s note).
67 Patirrup-pattu, 31, 1. 6.
68  முட்டை வேல் காட்சி கரசை.
The throbbing of a woman’s left eye-lid or her left shoulder or arm, was believed to betoken the happening of something good to her; while in the case of a man that significance was conveyed by the throbbing of his right eye-lid, arm or shoulder, a belief that persists to this day. The ‘click-click’ of the wall-lizard prognosticated good or evil according to the direction from which it proceeded, and even today that belief persists among country folk. We see from Aganānūru, that omens used to be consulted before going to battle. Knowledge of planetary astronomy and astrology existed among the Tamils in those early days; and lunar asterisms and months of the year were also known. The appearance of a comet or the falling of a meteor, it was believed, indicated the approaching death of a king.

Among the mythological stories then current, we may mention Tripura-Samhāra by Śīva, Śūrapadma-Samhāra by Subrahmaṇya and the Kṛṣṇa legends. Kṛttikā-dipam or 69 Pālai, 10.

70 Pālai, 10; Agam, 9; 151, 289, 351 and Naṟ, 246 and 333.
71 Paripāṭal, XI; Śīlap., and Patirrup-pattu, 24.
72 Puram, 229; Agam, 137 and 141.
73 Puram, 229.
74 Pālaik-kali, V and Puram, 55.
75 Patirrup-pattu, 12.
76 Śīlappadikāram refers to boyish sports and dances of Kṛṣṇa.
illumination on Tiru-Kārttigai day was common even in those early days;\textsuperscript{77} and we read of a Panguni festival (Agam 137).\textsuperscript{78}

With much that belonged to non-Aryan practices and primitive culture, Aryan rites and culture had also widely spread over the land. Worship of departed heroes was common. Puranānūru and Aganānūru contain several poems, from which we see that dolmens or rather stones were set up for the departed, whose weapons were placed leaning on the stones. These stones were decorated with red flowers and peacock feathers, and the name of the deceased hero was inscribed on them; and intoxicating liquor and worship were offered to them.\textsuperscript{79} Malignant demons were propitiated with sacrifice.\textsuperscript{80} Korra vai, was worshipped with elaborate sacrifices, especially before going to war. The dead were cremated,\textsuperscript{81} though burial also seems to have been practised.\textsuperscript{82} There is abundant proof that Vēdic religion had spread over the land, and Vēdic rites and rituals prevailed.\textsuperscript{83}

---

\textsuperscript{77} Nar., 202.

\textsuperscript{78} Pungunni-Utsavam, which falls in March-April, is the most important festival in Śri Padmanabha Svāmi temple at Trivandrum as also in temples of Tamil districts.

\textsuperscript{79} Puram, 232, 263, 264 and 329.

\textsuperscript{80} Patirup-pattu, 71.

\textsuperscript{81} Puram, 245 and 246.

\textsuperscript{82} Patirup-pattu, 44.

\textsuperscript{83} Ibid., III, and VII.
the deities that were worshipped were Śiva, Viṣṇu, Kṛṣṇa, Balarāma and Muruga or Śkanda. Brahmanas performed their Vedic rites\textsuperscript{84} and pursued their six-fold duties. They discharged the onerous duty of expounding Dharma to the kings, and they were chosen as king's ministers. In speaking of Palyānai Šelkelu-Kuṭṭuvan, Pālai Kaudamanār writes in Patirrup-pattu, III:

\begin{quote}
\texttt{DHARMAH \textit{Pattu}HYRODHARA\texttt{...}}
\end{quote}

\textit{Patiṟṟup-pattu, 24.}

As preceptors of Dharma, they were held in respect by kings. In Patirrup-pattu, VII, Kapilār in his praise of Šelvak-kaṭumkō Vāli Ātan writes: \texttt{Bhavamūrti \textit{Karuvai} \textit{Saguppu} \textit{Potrim}.}

From the testimony of Sangam literature, it is clear that Vedic rites were not infrequently performed even by kings, and Brahmanas were liberally helped to perform Yāgas. Gifts of cows and land were freely bestowed on them. We also read of Brahmana ascetics\textsuperscript{85} and one Čēra king, as we saw, became, after a life of military glory, an ascetic like his Brahmana preceptor. Though Brahmanism was predominant in the land, Buddhism and Jainism also prevailed among the people, and the adherents \textsuperscript{84} \textit{Neytal}, 2 and 13.

\textsuperscript{85} \textit{Pālai}, 8.
of all the three religions lived in the country in perfect friendliness. 86

Such is the political, social and religious background that Sangam literature presents in regard to the Cēra kingdom, which, richly endowed as it was by nature, was ruled over by sympathetic monarchs, who besides being great warriors, were also liberal patrons of learning and art, and made the welfare of the people their dominant concern. The Cēra Kingdom still flourishes like the bay tree; for it is gratifying to note that, though of the three Tamil kingdoms celebrated in Sangam literature, the Pāṇḍya and Cōla kingdoms have long ago ceased to exist, there still thrives under the rule of its own kings the Cēra kingdom,—

"Bright breadth of plain, blue-veined by many a stream, Umbrageous hills, sweet glades, and forest fair."

86 This is evident from a study of Śīlappadikāram.
BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Original Sources.

Abidhānacintāmaṇi.
Āgananūru, edited by Rajagopala Ayyangar.
Ainkuru-nūru.
Aṭharva Jyotisha.
Cūḍāmaṇi Nīghanḍu.
Dīvākaram.
Gāthasaptasati.
Hitopadeśa.
Kāḷavali-nārpatu.
Kalingattupparaṇī.
Karuvūr Sthalapurāṇam.
Kēralōtpatti.
Kuṟuntogai.
Mahābhārata.
Mahāvaṁśa.
Mānavadharmaśāstra.
Maṇimēkalai in its Historical Setting edited by Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar.
Matsyapurāṇa.
Nārāyaṇiyam.
Nāṟṟiṇai.
Paithāmaha Samhitā.
Paripāḍal.
Paṭīṟṟup-pattu.
Paṭṭinap-pālai.
Pattup-pāṭṭu.
Periplus.
Periyapurāṇam.
Pingalantai.
Porunar-āṟṟu-paḍai.
Puṟanānūru.
Puṟapporuḷ-venge-mālai.
Pūrvasaṁdeśa.
Rājavali.
Rāmaṁyaṇa.
Śankaravijayam.
Śilappadhikāram.
Śirupānāṛruppadai.
Śukasaṁdeśa.
Tirukkuṟal.
Taittariya Āraṇyaka.
Tolkāppiyam.
Vaikhānasā Dharmasūtra.
Vedāṅga Jyotisha, published by Dr. Shama Sastri in the Mysore Government Series.

Journals.

Epigraphia Indica.
Indian Culture.
Indian Historical Quarterly.
Journal of Indian History.
Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.
Madras Christian College Magazine.
Quarterly Journal of the Mythic Society.
Śen Tamil.
South Indian Inscriptions.
Tamilian Antiquary.
The Indian Ephemeris.
Travancore Archaeological Series.
Zeitschrift für Indologie und Iranistik.

Modern Works.

Aiyangar, Krishnaswami, Dr. S., Beginnings of South Indian History.
Aiyangar, Raghava, Pandit M., Cēran Śen-Kuṭṭūvan.
Aiyangar, Raghava, Mahavidvan R., Vaṅcimānagar.
Aiyangar, Srinivasa, M., Tamil Studies.
Aiyangar, Srinivasa, P. T., History of the Tamils.
Banerji, Junior History of India.
Caldwell, Comparative Grammar of Dravidian Languages.
Cambridge History of India.
Cambridge Shorter History of India.
Encyclopaedia Britannica.
Fleet, Dr., Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum.
Frazer, Literary History of India.
Imperial Gazetteer of India.
Jayaswal, K. P., History of India.
Jouveau Dubreuil, Ancient History of the Deccan.
Kanakasabai, Tamils 1800 years Ago.
Krishnaswami Aiyangar Commemoration Volume.
Pillai, Sivaraja, K. N., The Chronology of the Early Tamils.
Pillai, Srinivasa, Tamil Varalāru.
Pliny, Natural History.
Rapson, Ancient India.
Sankaracharya, Sri, Madras Discourses.
Sastri, Suryanarayana, Pandit V. G., Māna Vijayam.
Smith, Dr. V. A., Early History of India.
INDEX

Abidhāna-cintāmaṇi explains Vaiṣṇi as Koḍun-kolūr, 86.
Āḍaka-māḍam, same as Trivandrum or Iraviparam, 88.
Ādi-Manti, daughter of Karikāla Cōla, 29.
Aṭiyārkkunallar, 85.
Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu, significance of the prefix of, 23.
Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan, 4.
Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan came next to Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, 27 f; son of Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan, brother of Nārmuḍic-Cēral and the hero of the sixth decade of the Patirṛup-pattu, 27, 50, 51; conquests of and social conditions under, 28 f; extent of the kingdom of, 29; name answers to the title Vānavaramban, his battle at Vēṇi with Karikāla and death in it, 29 f; Perum Tōlātan, his title 31; richly rewarded Naccellaiyār, and took her to himself, 32; reigned for 33 years, 32, 48; to which group he belonged, 47-48; his chronology, 48; recovered cattle and brought them to Tōṇdi, 50; were his father and the father of Nārmuḍic-Cēral identical 51; consanguine brother of Śelvakkaḍunāko, and his father was also known as Antuvan-Cēral, 51; succeeded Antuvan-Cēral, 51; ruled at Tōṇdi, 54.
Agam, 7, 8, 9, 29, 30, 41, 54, 55, 58, 60, 61 n, 65, 82, 85, 93.
Aganānāru, a Śaṅgam collection, value and nature of, 2; sings in honour of Cēramān Perum-Śorru Udiyan-Cēralātan, 5; refers to Udiyan-Cēral’s conquests, 8, 9; 55, 82, 84.
Agap-poruṭ, 58.
Ainkurunāru, a Śaṅgam collection by Ďrampōkiyar collected and redacted at the instance of Yānai-kaṭ-Śey Māntaram-Cēral, 62.
Airai-Malai, probably the same as Aiyitai-Malai in Central Travancore, 15.
Akkūran, one of the seven first Vāḷḷals, 13.
Ālattūr Kīlār, 60.
Allūr, see Kodungolūr, 78.
Amarāvati, 95.
Ańcaikkalam (see Kodunkoḻur) capital of Cēramān-Perumāl, 86.
Ańci also known as Nečumīdal, 17; identity of, 17—18; must have been the chief of Kutiraimalai with his headquarters at Takaḍūr, 18; conquered by Kālankāik-kaṇṇi son of Nečum-Cēralātan, 17; a predecessor of Auvai's friend, Atiyāmān Nečumān Ańci.
Andhrabhrtya, 12.
Angārakavāra, 107.
Āni Vāni, R., 45, 95.
Ānporunai, 93, 95.
Ānporuntam, see Porunai, 80, 92, 93, 95.
Antuvaṇ, husband of Perum Dēvi, 74.
Antuvaṇ-Cēral; Ādu-kōtpatục-Cēralātan of Tōṇḍi, 52.
Ātan Avini to be placed before Māṅtaram-Cēral, 62.
Antuvaṇ-Cēral Irumporai, Tōṇḍi capital, 47.
Araśil Kīlār, sung the eighth decade of the Pātiruppattu, in praise of Perum-Cēral Irumporai, 41, 43; made the king's minister, 43.
Arugai, an enemy of Pālaiyan and an ally of Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, 22.
Ārya-Nādu, 50.
Ārya Perumāl, 78.
Aśoka, 9, 16, 18.
Atiyamān and Sātiyaputra, discussion of, 18.
Atiyamān Elini, defeated at Takaḍūr in Kolikkūṟṟam by Perum-Cēral Irumporai, 42.
Auvai, and Vēḷḷivitiyār, 29.
Banavasi Kaḍambas, 12.
Belief in omens and astrology, 152–3.
Bhagavati worship, spread of, due to the consecration of a temple to Pattini Kaṭavuḷ, 27.
Bhaṭṭāraka vāra, 107.
Bhāvāṇi, R., 45.
Caldwell, Bishop, 90, 91, 99.
Cambridge Shorter History of India, 24.
Cape Comorin, 11, 21.
Cēra Kingdom, source for the early story of, 1.
Cēras, a line of rulers who bore the name of Irumpoṟai, 34.
Cēras of Vaṇci and Tonḍi, Genealogy of, 52.
Cēralātan, see Imayavaramban Neḷum-Cēralātan, 14 f; see Āḍu-kōṭ-pāṭṭuc-Cēralātan, 28 f.
Cēralātan, 40; see Šelvak-kaḍunko-vaḷiātan, Cēralātan, the father of Nārmuḍic-Cēral, 51, 73.
Cēral Irumpoṟais, represented a junior branch of the Cēra dynasty, 34—35; their seat of Government at Tonḍi, 83.
Cēramān Antuvan Cēral Irumpoṟai, 4: mentioned in Patigam of Patiṟṟup-pattu, VII, 35, 36; belonged to the northern line of the Cēras and was the son of Karuvūr-ērīya Perum-Cēral, 36, 47, 50; frequent invasions of the Cennis and the Killus into his territories 36—37; entry of Muḍittalai Kō Pernarkillī into Karuvūr which belonged to him 30; invasion and capture of Pamalūr, by Šēm Šet-Cenni, and the battle of Pōr where both died, 37, 50; his other name Kuḍakko Neḷum-Cēralātan, 37, 51; or simply Neḷum-Cēralātan, 38; had a son Šelvak-kaḍunko-vaḷiāyan 38; succeeded by Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-
Cēralātan, 50, 51;
Cēramān Kuḍakko Neḷum-Cēralātan, 37; see Cēramān-Antuvan Cēral Irumpoṟai.
Cēramān Kaḍalōṭṭiya Vēl Kēḻu Kuṭṭuvan, 5.
Cēramān Kaduṅkō Vaḷiāyan, 4.
Cēramān Kaṇaikkāl Irumpōrai, 5.
Cēramān Karuvūr epiya Ōlavāl-Koperum-Cēral Irumpōrai, 4; mentioned in Puram 5, 34; first viceroy of the Cēras in the north of their empire, 35, 50; time of, 35 f; ruled with Toṇḍi as his capital, 47; succeeded by Antuvaṇ Cēral as ruler of Toṇḍi, 50.

Cēramān Karuvūr Ėpiya Ōlvāṭ Kopperum-Cēral Irumpōrai, 83.

Cēramān Kok-kodai Mārban, 5.
Cēramān Koṭṭambalattut-tuñeiyā Mākkōdai, 5.
Cēramān Kuṭṭakkō Cēral Irumpōrai, 5.
Cēramān Kuṭṭakkō Neḍum-Cēralātān, 5.
Cēramān Kuṭṭuvan Kōḍai, 5.
Cēramān Mākkōdai, 29.

Cēramān Ma-Venkō, 5, 56; mentioned in Puram 36, 56, 73; perhaps the same as Pālaipādiya Perum Kaḍumko, 56, 57.

Cēramān Pālaipādiya Perum Kaḍuṅko, 4.
Cēramān Perumāl, Aṇcaikkāḷam his capital, 86.

Cēramān Perum-Cēralātān, 5; defeated at Veṇṇi by the Cōla Karikāl Vaḷavan, 29 f; the same as Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātān, 30.

Cēramān Perum-Ṣoṛṛu Udiyan Cēralātān, 4; mentioned in Puranānūru, 5; supplied food to the rival armies at Kurukṣētra? 7; sung by Koṭṭambalattuṇcīya Cēramān, 7, identical with Koṭṭambalattuṇcīya Mākkōdai, 8; called Vāṇavaramban, 8—9; founder of the Cēra dynasty of the Saṅgam Period, 9—10; father of Imaṇavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātān, 10, married Nallini the daughter of Vēliyan Veṇmān, 10; founded Udiyan-pēṛūr, the Diamper of the Christians, 10; his descendants mentioned in the Patirrup-pattu, 33.

Cēramān Takaḍūrerinta Perum-Cēral Irumpōrai, 5.
Cēramān Vaṇcan, 5, 60, 69.
Cēramān Yānai;kāt-Śey Māntaram Cēral Irumpōraī, 5.
Cēran Śen-Kuṭṭuvaṇ, 27, 49, 110.
Cēra women, freely married Vēḷs and Cōḷas, 75.
Cēruppu mounaments, 15.
Cēnnīs and Kīllīs, rival chieftains or clans striving to extend their territory, 36-7.
Cūdāmaṇi Nīghaṇḍu, 8.
Coelobothros, 91.
Cōḷa Nalam-Kīlī Śet Cennī, a contemporary of Kāriyaṟṟuttuṇciya Neḍum Kīlī, Perum-Cēral Irumpōraī and Kuṭṭuvaṇ Kōḍai, 70.
Cōḷan Kō Śeṅkaṇṇān, 81;
Cōḷan Maṅakkīḷī, 73, 74.
Cōḷiya or Kēraḷa Perumāl, 78.
Commaraswamy, A. K., Dr., 119.
Cranganore, anglicised form of Koḍunkōḻūr, 88.
Cūdāmaṇi, 95.
Cūrṇī, 94.
Cūtam, 95.
Daṇḍāraṇiyam, in Ārya Nāḍu, 50.
Dēvaṇām-priya, discussion about, 9;
Dikshit, S. B., 108.
Dīvākaram, 84, 93, 95.
Dubreuil, J. Dr., 116.
Gaja-bāhu, attended the consecration of a temple to Pattini Kaḍavul, 27.
Guṇaka, 87.
Guṇapuraṇam, 94.
Guṇapuri, 87.
Guruvāyūr, 87.
Himālaya, 6, 11, 21, 75.
Iḷam-Cēral Irumpōraī, hero of the ninth decade of the Patiṟṟup-pattu, 44; his liberality and greatness, 44f; defeated Perum Cōḷa, Iḷam-Palaiyan Māraṇ, and Vicci and destroyed the five forts, 45; Patronised Perum Kunṭūr Kīḷār, and reigned for sixteen years, 46; descendant of Imayavaramban, Nārmudiccēral and Perum-Cēral Irumpōrai, 47.

Iḷam-Cēral, son of Antuvan Šēllai, Kuṭṭuvan Irumpōrai, 74.

Iḷam-Kuṭṭuvan, 55.

Imayavaramban Neḍum Cēralātan, 4, 14, 33; son of Udiyan Cēral and Vēliyan’s daughter Nallinā, 10; his conquests, 10 f; Punishment of the Yavananas by, 13; his munificence, and the condition of the country under him, 8, 13, 14; reigned for fifty-eight years, 14, 48; his title Imayavaramban transformed into Imaya Varman by some Malayalam scholars 14; his brother Pāl Yānai Šēl Kēlu Kuṭṭuvan, 14, 48; his alleged son, Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, 21; Āḍu-kōtpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan another alleged son, 27; ruled at Vaiĉi, 47; and Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, 48–49; his sons’ rule, 49–50, 52, 73, 74, 75, 84.

Indian Culture, 18.

Industries pursued, 140–46.

Indra Perumāl, 78.

Iravipuram, 88, 89.

Kāḍal Pīrakkōṭṭya Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, 4.

Kāḍambas (Kāḍambu clan), conquest of by Imayavaramban, 11, country of, 12; and the Banavasi Kāḍambas, 12; were they pirates, 12.

‘Kāḍambu’ clan, discussion about, 11; conquest of the, by Imayavaramban, 11 f; its chief Nannan, conquered by Kāḷankāik-kaṇṇi Nārmudicc-Cēral, 17 and 19.

Kaduṅkō, see Šелvakaḍuṅkōvāliātan.

Kuḍavāyiīl Kōṭṭam, 68.

Kākkai-pŏḍiniyar Nāccellaiyār, author of the sixth decad of the Pātirup-pattu, 27; rewarded by Āḍu-kōtpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan, 32.

Kāḷaḍī, 94.
INDEX

Kaļankāik-kaṇṭi Nārmudic-Cēral 4 son of Imayavaramban Neḍum-Cēralātan, 17; hero of the fourth decad of the Patirrup-pattu, 17; his conquests, 17 f; defeated Neḍumidal or Aṇci and Ṛṣṇan, 17 f; an ideal monarch, 19 f; extent of the kingdom of, 20; also called Vānavaramban, 20; ruled for twenty-five years, 21, 48; ruled at Vaṇci, 47; reigning at Mantai 149. Were his father and Kuḍakko Neḍum-Cēralātan identical, 51;
Kalavalinārupatu, composed by Poigayār to secure the release of Cēramān Kaṇaikkāl Irumporai, 81; Kalingattuparani evidence of Karikāla's victory at Venṇi, 30, 31.
Kalittogai, by Nallantuvenār, 57, retracted at the instance of Ugrap-peruvaluti, 58.
Kaḷuval, an Iḍayar chief defeated by Perum-Cēral Irumporai, 41-42.
Kaṇaikkāl Irumporai, his punishment of Mūvan, a chief, 67 f; his death, 68-69; a contemporary of Cōla Śen-Kaṇan, 70.
Kaṇaiyan, a Cēra feudatory killed Paḷaiyan a Cōla general in battle, for which he was defeated and killed by Śen-Kaṇan the Cōla King, 68.
Kanakasabhai, 62, 89.
Kaṇṇaki, the apotheosised wife or Paṭṭini Kaḍavul, 24; her death mentioned by hillmen mentioned in the Silappadhikāram, 27.
Kapilar, one of the greatest of the Sangam poets, the author of the seventh decad of the Patirrup-pattu, 38; patronised by Pāri and after him by Śelvakkaḍunkō-vaḷiyātan, 38-39; has sung two lyrics about his patron in the Purāṇānāru, 39 f.
Kāppiyāṛru Kāppiyanār, author of the 4th decad of the Patirrup-pattu, 17; describes the ideal rule of Nārmudiccēral, 19 f.
Kāri, of Mullur, slew ᪆ṛi of Kollimalai, 85.
Karikāla, Cōla, war of succession after the death of, 23 f; date of, 29; his daughter Ādi Manti, 29, 53; won a battle at Veṇṇi against Čūramān Perum Čēralātan or Perum Tōlātan?, 29—30; identification of, 30; evidence of the Kalingattuparāni, 30 f; effect of the victory of Veṇṇi on, 32.

Kāriyāru, 60.
Kāriyāruttuniciya Neḏum Kiḷḷi a contemporary of Perum-Cēral Irumporai, Kuṭṭuvan Kōḍai and Cōla Nalam Kiḷḷi Set Ėnni, 70.

Karūr, 91.
Karuvūr, different from Vaṁci, 35, 82, 84; not the Cēra capital, 83; and Vaṁci, 84, 85, 86, 88, 90.
Karuvūr, (Trichy District)—same as Vaṁci, 80, 81, 82; in Koṅgu Nāḍu and not in Malai Nāḍu, 84, 85, called Karuvūrānilai by Tirujānāsambanda, 86, 90.
Karuvūr-ānilai see Karuvūr, 86.
Karuvūr Kaṇṭampālanār, 82.
Karuvūr-sthala Purāṇam, 95.
Keprobothras, 91.
Keya Perumāl, 78.
Killis, and Ėnnis, rival chiefs or clans striving to extend their territory, 36—7.
Killivalavan, invested and captured Vaṁci, 60; his court poetess Mārōk-Kattu Nappa-Śalaiyār, 61; said to have invaded Kōḍal and died at Kulumurram, 61; invaded Kudal and slew Pālaḷiya Māran, 67; contemporary of Kōk-Kōḍal Marban, 70.

King—hereditary, 134, assemblies 136, function of being, 137.
Kōḍai Māṛpa, Perum-Cēral Irumporai, addressed as, 43; a subsequent Čēra bore that title, 44.
Koçukür, a stronghold of Nannan, destroyed by Sen-Kuṭṭuvan, 23.

Kök-Kodai Mārban—his rule at Toṇḍi, 66—67, 69; contemporary of Kīlli-vaḷavaṇ, 70.

Koṭumamaṇam, probably the modern Kolumam, formed part of the kingdom of Selvak-kadunko Vāḷiyātan, 41.

Koṭumkōlūr, (Cranganore), same as Vaṇci, 80, 85, 86; described as Āṅcaik-kalām by Sundaramūrti, 86, 88, 90, 96.

Koli (Urāiyūr), 81.

Kolli, Perum-Cēral Irumporai, the lord of, 42.

Kollimalai, 85.

Kōlūr in Koḍuṅkōlūr, 90.

Kōnattu Eriecalūr Māḍalān Maturaik-kumaranār eulogised Kuṭṭuvan Koḍai in Puram (51), 53, 54; has also sung of Ḡavantip-pallīt-tuṇciya Nalam Kīlli Šeṭ Cenni, 53.

Kongar, war against the, 22, 34.

Kongar-Nāḍu, conquered by Palyānai Śel Kēlu-Kuṭṭuvan, 15; Iḷam-Cēral Irumporai, the lord of, 45, 82, 84, 85, 86.

Kōravai, worshipped by Palyānai Śel Kēlu-Kuṭṭuvan, 16.

Ko Śen Kaṇān, the Cōla king relations with Kaṇaikkāl Irumporai, 68, 70.

Kōṭṭambalam, 7.

Kōṭṭambalattut-tuṇciya Māk-Koḍai, identical with Kuṭṭuvan Cēral, 54.

Kourellour, see Kuḷumūr, 8.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, Dr. S., 62, 97, 111.

Krśtiṅdīpam, 153.

Kuccara Kuṭṭigai, 100—111.

Kudakkō Iḷam-Cēral-Irumporai, 4.
Kudakko Nēdum Cēralātan, father of Ādu-kōtpattuo-Cēralātan, also known as Antuvan-Cēral, 51.

Kudal or Madura, invaded by Killivalavan, 67.
Kudalur Kilār a bard of Yānaik Kaṭ-sēy, 66.
Kuda-Nādu, 50.

Kulamurrum, same as Kurāppalli according to Dr. Pope, 61; the place of battle in which Killivalavan died, 70.

Kulumur, perhaps Ptolemy's Kourellour, identification of, 8.

Kumuli, same as Kulumur, 8.

Kūn Pāṇḍya, 102.

Kuriṇci land, 67.
Kurukṣetra, battle of, 7.

Kurumkōliyur, Kilār, 64.

Kuruntogai, 41, 59, 60.

Kuṭṭuvan Cēral or Kuṭṭuvan Kōdai of Vaṇci, 69; contemporaneous with Perum Cēral Irumporai, Kāriyārriṇciya Nēdum Killi and Cōla Nalam Killi Šet-Ceṇṇi, 70.

Kuṭṭuvan Irumporai, 74.

Kuṭṭuvan Kōdai alias Māk-Kōdai; same as Kuṭṭuvan Cēral son of Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, 53, 54; succeeded Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, 53—54; identical with Koṭṭambalattut-tuṇciya Mākkodai a royal poet, 54.

Kuṭṭuvar-Nādu, Īlam-Cēral Irumporai, the lord of, 45.
Maiyūrkilān Vēṇmāl Antuvan Šellai bore Īlam-Cēral to Kuṭṭuvan Irumporai, 74.

Mākkōdai, see Kuṭṭuvan Cēral or Kuṭṭuvan Kōdai, 53, 69.

Makōdai, or Musiri ornament of Aṅcaikkalam, 86, the Tiruvancaḷimalukham of Kēralōtpatti, 86; called by Laksīmi-dāsa as Rājadhāni Mahōdaya puri, 87.
Malai Nadu, 84.

Māmūlar or Māmūlanār, author of a lyric (Agam 233), 7; refers to Udiyan Cēral, 8, 41; mentions the conquests of Imayavaramban, 12; and the Kadambas, 12; mentions Imayavaramban’s conquest of Māntai, 13; mentions Vāna Varamban, 20.

Māna Vijayam, 69 n.

Mangalore, 29, 50.

Maṇimekalai, 80.

Māntai, probably the same as Mandagara of the Periplus, 13; a line of Cēras ruling at, 49.

Māntarān Cēral, to be placed after Ātan Avini, 62.

Māntaram Poṇaiyan Kaṭunkō see Šelvak-kaṭunkō Vālijātan, 41.

Māroṅ-Kattu Nappasalaiyār court poetess of Kili-vālavan, 61.

Maduraṇ Iḷa-Nākanār, a contemporary of the Pāṇḍya Ilavantikaip-pallit-tuṅciya Nanmāran, 58; has sung about Nallantuvanār, 57.

Marumakkattāyam, law of, 71-75.

Marutam land, 67.

Mā Venkō, 60-61; a contemporary of Rājasūyam vēṭṭa Perunarkiḷḷi, 70.

Mōsu Kīranār, the author of Puram (50); his patronage by Perum-Cēral Irumporai, 43.

Muḍittalai Kō Perunarkiḷḷi, a Cōla, entered the precincts of Karuvūr, 36-37; perhaps the same as Velpahradakkai Perunap Kiiḷḷi, 37.

Mukkūṭal, 26.

Mullūr, 85.

Muraṇciyūr Muḍīnāgarāyāyar, celebrates Cēramān Perum Šoṟṟu Udiyan Cēralātan in Puram, 5.
Musiri, Musari in Sanskrit literature, infested with piracy during the days of Pliny, 8; but a safe port during the days of Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, 23; trade at, 26; sacked, 60; also known as Makōḍai, 86, 92. Nakkirar, 57; refers to an invasion of Kūḍāl by Killi-vaḷavan, 67.

Nalam Killi aliās Śet Coṇni also referred to as Ter Vāṇ Killi, 46 n.

Nallantuvanār, the redactor of Kaḷittogai, 57; sung about by Marudan Iḷa-Nākanār, 58.

Nallini, wife of Udiyan Cēral, 10; daughter of Veḷiyan Vēnmān, 10.

Nallini, daughter of Velian Veḷ, 73.

Nannan, chief of Pūḷi and the head of the Kaḍambu clan 19; called by Paraṇar as Nannan Udiyan, 19; revolt and subjugation of by Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, 23; helped by the Cōla and the Pāṇḍya, 23.

Nannans, territory of the, ‘the gold producing Konkonam’ of ancient Tamil literature, 11.

Naoura of the Periplus, Naravu, the Nitria of Pliny, 29; identified with Mangalore by Yule and others, conquered by Āḍu-kōṭpāṭṭu Cēralātān, which has been referred to by Veḷli-vitiyār, 29, 50.

Nārāyaṇiyam a Malayalam Campu, 88.

Nāḍcōṇai—Śen-Kuṭṭuvan’s mother, 73, 74.

Narivēruttalaiyār, a poet who sings in Puram (5), about Cēramān Karuvūr-eṭiya Oḷvāl Kēperum-Cēral Irumpōrāi, 34, 83.

Nāṛmuḍic-Cēral, son of Cēralātān by Paduman Dēvi, 73.

Nāṛrīṇai a Śangam collection, value and nature of, 2; 58, 59.

Natural History, 91.
INDEX

Nedumbāratāyanār accepted by Palyānai-Śel-Kelu Kuṭṭuvan as his preceptor, 16.
Nedum Śeliyan, won the battle of Talai-ālamkānam, 65;
Nērīfaya the place where Śen-Kuṭṭuvan defeated the Cōlas and placed Perum Kilī on the throne, 24.
Netravati, R., 29.
Neytal land, 67.
Neytalankānal Iḷam-Śēt-Cenni, probably a contemporary of Muḍiṭtalai Perunarp Killī, 37; identity with Uruvapahrar Iḷam-Śēt-Cenni, 37; capture of Pamalūr, and the consequent battle of Pōr beween him and Antuvan Cēral where both died, 37.
Nilakanta Sastrī, K. A., 111.
Nitria of Pliny, the Naoura of the Periplus or Naravu, 29.
Nūṟṟuvar Kannar, 115—17.
Okantur, a village dedicated to Viṣṇu by Śelvav-Kadunkō Vāliyātan, 39.
Ōrampōkiyar, has sung of Ātan Avini in Ainkuru-nāru, 62.
Ori of Kollimalai slain by Kāri, 85.
Orutantai, father of Perum Dēvi, 74.
Pālai Gautamanār the author of Patirṟup-pattu III helped by Palyānai Śel Keḷu Kuṭṭuvan, 16.
Pālaik-kali of Palaipādiya-Perum-Kadumkō, 56, 59.
Palaipādiya Perum Kaḷumkō, 56; chronology of, 57 f; his poems, 58 f.
Palaiyan Māran, (defeated by Iḷam-Cēral Irumpoṇai, 67); slain by Kiliḷivalavan, 67.
Palaiyan, Mōgur-Mānnan or lord of Mōgur, conquered by Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, 22.
Pal-Yânai-Šel-Kelu Kuṭṭuvan, brother of Imaya-varamban, 14, 84; his conquests and achievements, 15, 16, 33; lord of Pūli Nāḍu, the Ceruppu mountains and the Aiyirai-Malai, 15, 33, and Kongunāḍu, 34; eulogised as Kuṭṭuvan, 15; the change in him, 15—16; worshipped Koṟravai as a warrior, 16; accepted Neđum-bāratāyanār as his preceptor, 16; performed Devayājña and Atithiyajña, 16; reigned for twenty-five years, 16, 48; became an anchoret, 17; succeeded by Kaḷankāik-kaṇṇi Nārmudīcēral, 17; appointed a viceroy in the northern part of his empire, 34, 50, 83.

Pāṇdi Perumāl, 78.

Panguni festival, 154.

Paraṇar, author of Agam (258), 19; of the fifth decad of the Patirrup-pattu, 21; 25; was one of the greatest poets of the Šaṅgam age, 21; should have died before Šen Kuṭṭuvan’s northern expedition, 24; the revenue from Umbarkkāḍu given to him by Šen Kuṭṭuvan, 26; author of Agam, (246), 30; Kuṭṭuvan Kodai was entrusted to his care, 53, 54; speaks of the munificence of Pāri, 38, 41; has sung in honour of Šenguṭṭuvan in Agam (208), and refers to Īri, 85.

Parašurāma, 77.

Paravūr, a town in N. Travancore, 26.

Pāri, his bountifulness, spoken by Paraṇar; patronised Kapīlar, 38—39.

Paripādal, 81.

Patigam, antiquity of, 3—4;

Patirrup-pattu, 47, nature and value of, 1—2; a Patikam appended to each, 3; deals with the achievements of eight Čēra kings, 4; and Udiyan Čēral, 9—10; and Imayavaramban Neđum-
Cēralātan, 10, 11, 12, 14; and Paḻ-Yānai Šel-Kelu Kuṭṭuvaṇ, 15, 16; Šen-Kuṭṭuvaṇ the hero of its fifth decad, 21, 24, 25; the revenue from Umbarkkādu given to its author, 26; next deals with Ādu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan, 27 f, 51; its sixth decad written by Kākkai-pāḍiniyār Naccellayār,
27; will afford explanation for the name Perum
Tolāṭan, 31; descendents of Cēramān Perum
Coṟru Udiyan Cēralātan, according to it, 33; mentions Cēramān Antuvan Cēral Irumpɔrɔi, 36; its seventh decad with Šelvak-kadunkovaliyātan as hero, is written by Kapilar, 38;
it eighth decad with Perum Cēral Irumpɔrɔi by Arašil Kīḷār, 41—43; its ninth decad written by Perum Kunur Kīḷār, 44; evidence of on Tonći, 50; a strange view of, 76—77; 81, 82; third decad written by Pālai-gautamanār in honour of Palyānai-Šel-Kelu Kuṭṭuvaṇ, 84, 85.

Patṭinap-palai, its hero Karikāla, 36.

Pattini Dēvi, Šen-Kuṭṭuvaṇ’s march to North India to bring a stone for making an image of 24; consecration of a temple to, 27, 113—114.

Periplus, 13, 20; Naoura of, 29, 91.

Periyapurāṇam, 86.

Periyār, R., 15, 26, 86, 92, 93, 93 n, 94.

Perumāla, 78.

Perum Cēral Irumpɔrɔi, son of Šelvak-Kadunko
Valiyātan, succeeded his father, 41; Arašil Kīḷār sang the eighth decad of the Patirrup-pattu in praise of him, 41; defeated Kaluval and won a battle against Atiyamān Elini at Takaḍur, 42; his greatness: lord of Kolli and Puhār, 42; his patronage of men of letters like Arašil Kīḷār and Moṣu Kīranār, 43; ruled for 17 years, 43; is addressed as Kodai Mārpa, 43—44; succeeded by his son Ilam-Ceral Irumporai, 44; ruled with Tondi as his capital, 47; a contemporary of Kuṭṭuvan Kōdai Kāriyaruttuṇciya Neḍum Killi and Cōla Nalām Killi Šet Cenni, 70.

Perum Cōla Ilam Palaiyan Māran, defeated by Ilam-Ceral Irumporai, 45.

Perum Killi, afterward known as Nalām Killi Šet Cenni, brother-in-law of Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, succeeded Karikāla, and his right contested, but placed securely on the throne by Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, 23 ff.

Perumkōli Nāykan Magal Nakkannaiyar, 73.

Perum Kunrūr Kilār, a Šāngam poet, 12; refers to the large gifts made to Kapilar, 39; author of the ninth decad of the Patirup-pattu, 44; patronised by Ilam-Ceral Irumporai, 44, 45, 46; his alleged singing of Puram (266) in honour of Urvapahrer Ilam-Šet-Cenni, 46 n.

Perum Corru Udiyan-Ceralātan of Vañci, 52, 54.

Pēy-makal Ila Vēyini, the authoress of Puram (11), 56.

Pingalantai, 84, 93, 95.

Pliny, piracy during the days of, 23; Nitria of, 29; Natural History of, 91.

Poigaiyar the court poet of Kōk-Kōdai-Mārban and Kaṇaikkal Irumporai, 66, 67; sang Kaḷavaḷi-nārpatu in praise of Šen Kaṇān, 68.

Por, the battle of, 37, 51, 68.

Poraiyan Perumdēvi, 74.

Porunai, explained as Anporuntam, 90; should be Periyar, 92.

Porunāṟṟupadai, its hero Karikāla, 30.

Poruntam, 94.

Poruntill Ilam Kīranar, a poet who has sung about Yanal Kaṭ-sēy Māntaram Cēral, 66;
INDEX

Póravaikko Perunarkiḷḷi, son of Tiṭṭan, 70.
Potiya, 6.

Ptolemy, 8; and the Kaḻambu clan, 12; and the Yavanas, 13.

Pugār, Perum Cēral Irumporai, the lord of, 42.
Pūḷi Nāḍu, ruled by Palyānai Śel-Keḷu-Kuṭṭuvan, 15, 33; also known as Konkānām, 33.
Pūḷi-Nāḍu Ṇam Cēral Irumporai, the lord of, 45.
Punishment, nature of, 67—68.

Pūram, 8, 20; nature of, 1; mentions Cēramān Perum Śōṟṟu Udiyan Cēralātān, 5; 29; 31, 34, 35, 36, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 46 n, 53, 56, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 73, 83, 92, 93.
Pūraṇāṉāṟu, 33, 39; a collection of 400 lyrics, 1; their colophons, 3; Cēra kings mentioned in, 4—5; commentator of, 6; 39, 53, 55, 56, 62, 66, 69, 81, 92.

Pūṟṇa, R., 94.

Raghava Iyengar, Pandit R., of Ramnad, 7.

Rājadhāni Mahodayapuri, of which Tīruvaṅcēkaḷām formed a part, see Makōḍlai, 87, 94.

Rājasūyam vēṭṭa Perunarkiḷḷi—a contemporary of Mā Veṅko and Yānai Kaṭ-śēy, 29, 70; the Cōḷa mentioned in the Maṇimēkalai as the victor of Kāriyāru, 60; his battle with Yānai-Kaṭ-śēy, 70.

Ramachandra Dikshitar, V. R., 9 n, on the Satyaputras, 18; on Marumakkattāyam, 75 n, 133 n.

Ravigrāmam, 88.

Ṣangam period, 1, 9; literature, 23; works, 1.

Sankar, K. G., 103, 105.

Ṣankara-Vijaya, 94.

23
Satakarni, a friend of Sen-Kuttuvan, 24.
Satiyaputra, Satyaputra, discussion on, 18.
Sāyana on Cēra, 132.
Sekkīlār, states that Vañci is Koḍuṅkolūr, 86.
Selvak-Kaṭuṅkō, an illustrious ancestor of Pām-Cēral Irumpōrai, 45; son of Cēramān Antuvan Cēral Irumpōrai and the hero of the seventh decade of Patirrup-pattu, 4, 38 f., 51; condition of the country under his patronage of art and letters, and particularly of Kapilar, 38—9; sung about in the Puranānūru by Kapilar, 39—40; his supremacy owned by the Cōlas and the Pāṇḍyas, 40; his other names, Māntaram Poṟaiyan Kaṭunko, Poṟaiyan, Paṟumpūṭ Poṟaiyan and Perumpūṭ Poṟaiyan, 4; reigned for twenty-five years and died at Chikkarpalli, 41; extent of his territory, 41; succeeded by his son Irum-Cēral Irumpōrai, 41; ruled with Toṇḍi as his capital, 47.
Sen-Kaṇṇan, 103.
Sen-Kuttuvan, a son of Imayavaramban, 21; hero of the fifth decade of the Patirrup-pattu, 21; hero of the Śilappadikāram, 21; his conquests, 21 f.; his defeat of Palaiyan, 22; won a naval victory and took the title Kaḍal Piṟakkōṭṭiya, 22; Yavana ships called at the port of Muṣiri during the days of, 23; put down the revolt of Nannan, and destroyed Viyalūr and Koḍukūr, 23; interfered in the war of succession in the Cōla country on the death of Karikāla, and securely placed Perum Kiḷḷi on the throne, 23—24; undertook an expedition to North India for consigning the remains of his deceased mother in the Ganges, 24; led another expedition to the Gangetic region for fetching a suitable stone for making an image of Pattinikaḍavul, 24; date of, 24 f.; his insignia, the fish, the tiger and the bow, 5; administration and society under, 25 f.; his partiality for Küttu, 25 f.; his gifts to Parañar, 26; his contribution to the spread of the Bhagavati worship, 27; reigned for 55 years, 25, 27, 48; monograph on by Pandit M. Raghava Iyengar, 27; contemporary and relation of Karikāla, 30; ruled at Vañci, 47.

Set Cenni also known as Nalam Kili and Ter Vañ Kili, 46 n.

Silappadhikāram, 1; nature and value of, 2; written by Ḳamkō Adikāḷ the Cēra Prince, 2, 21; its hero Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, 2, 21, says that Nannan was helped by the Cōla and the Pāṇḍya against Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, 23; refers to Śen-Kuṭṭuvan’s northern expedition, 24, 25; on the king’s partiality for Küttu 26; mentions Śen-Kuṭṭuvan’s hearing of Kaññaka’s death, 27, 80, 81, 88, 92.

Sivaraja Pillai, K. N., 76 n., 120—121.
Somasundara Bharati, S., 71.
Somasundara Desikar, S. 105.
Srinivasa Aiyangar, M., 71.
Śukasamdeśa, 87, 87 n., 94.
Sundarar, 89.
Suryanarayana Sastri, S. S., 111.
Swamikannu Pillai, L. D., 97, 104—5.
Swaminatha Ayyar, Mahamahopādhyaya Dr. V., on Karuvūr, 85.

Takaḍūr, battle of, where Perum Cēral Irumporai defeated Atiyamān Elīni and two other great kings, 42, 47.

Tagaḍūr erinta Perum-Cēral Irumporai, 4.
Tagadüráyáttirai, an old Tamil work, now missing, which celebrates the conquest of Takaḍür by Perum-Ceral Irumporai, 42.

Talaiálamkánam, battle of, 65.

Talaiálamkánatúu-Ceruvénya Neđum Śelíyan, a Pándya king, 63, 65.

Tamús 1800 Years Ago, 62.

Tamraparṇi, 93, 93 n.

Tēvāram, 86, 107.

Tiru-ançaik-kālam, 90.

Tirujñínásambanda, 86.

Tirukāriyūr, 89.

Tirupūnātura, 94.

Tiruvaḷḷuvar, 107.

Tiru Vańcikālam, 35, 96.

Tiruvanantapuram, 20.

Tiruvańcak-kālam—see Tiruvańcikkaḷam, 89, 91.

Tiruanańcaikkaḷam, see Ańcaikkaḷam, 89, 90; a suburb of Kodun-kolūr, 80, 87, 88, 92.

Tittan father of Velíyan Vēnmand, 10; earliest of the Cōla kings who ruled at Uṟaiyūr, 10.

Toṇdi, headquarters of the North Cēra country, 35, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54.

Toṇdi, Ṛlam-Cēral Irumporai, the lord of, 45.

Toṇdi branch, members of, 69.

Ṭrakaṇāmatilakam, 89; also known as Guṇapuri or Guṇaka apparently the Guṇavāyil of the Śilappadhiķāram, 87, 94.

Tripunittura—called Ravigrāmam, 88.

Ṭrpura-samhāra, a story recited with action by a Śakkiyan of Paravūr before Śen-Kuṭṭuvan and his queen, 26.
INDEX.

Udayan Bāna Varman, see Vānavaramban, 9.
Udiyan Cēral, see Pērum-Śoṟṟu Udiyan Cēralāṭan, 10.
Ugrap-peruvalūdi, the Pāṇḍya, 57; his successor sacked Mūsiri, 60.
Umbarkkāḍu (elephant forest) perhaps the region round the Anaimalai in N. W. Travancore, 14; its revenue given to Paraṇar by Śen-Kuṭṭuvan, 26.

Umbarkkāḍu, viḍu, 14.

Uraiyur Ėniccēri Muḷa Mōsiyār—sang Puram (13), 36.

Urantai (Uraiyur), 81.

Uruva-pahrer Iḷam Śet Cenni, his son Karikāla, the famous Cōla emperor, 30; sung about in Puram (266) by Perum Kunrūr Kilāṟ! 46 n.

Vāgai Parantalai, 45.

Vāgaipperunturai, the place where Nannan was defeated, 19.

Vallais, 13.

Vampa Mōriyar, 109—110.

Vānavaramban, a name of Udiyan Cēral in Puram (2), discussion about, 8, 9; mentioned by Nighaṇḍus, 10; mentioned by Māmūlār, 20; ruled at Vaṇci, 47.

Vaṇci, the identification of, 80; in Malai-nāḍu, 83, 84, 85, 86, 90, 92.

Vaṇci, same as Tiruvaṇcikaḷam, 35.

Vaṇcikaḷam, 88.

Vaṇcimurṟam, 88.

Vaṇcimūṭūr, 61; lay elsewhere than in Karuvūr, 85.

Vaṇculēsā, 90.

Vāṇi (Vāhini) different from Bhavāṇi and Ani
Vāṇi, and running north of Coimbatore, 45.
Vaniči branch, members of, 69.
Vātāpi, 99.
Vēl-Avikkōmān Padumān Dēvi, see Padumān Dēvi 73; bore a son Ādu-kōṭpāṭṭuc-Cēralātan to Neḍum-Cēralātan, 74.
Vēlir, chief of the, 73.
Vēliyam or Vēliyattu, probably the modern Vēli-jyiṣyam 20; its probable corruption Balita said in the Periplus to be in the Cōla kingdom, 20.
Vēliyan Vēl, the Vēlir chief; 73.
Vēliyan Vēmāl Nallini, 73.
Vēliyan Vēṃmān, later known as Cōlān Porvaikko-Perunarkilā, 10; son of Tiṭṭan, 10; father of Nallini, 10.
Vēlīvitiyār, 29; date of 29.
Vēlpahradakkai Peruvirār Kīlī, 37.
Vēlpahradakkai Perunār Kīlī, perhaps the same as Muḍittalai Perunār Kīlī, 37.
Vēls, 75.
Vēlvikudi plates, 102.
Venṇi, the battle of, in which Karikāla won a battle against the Cēra, the Pāṇḍya and the Vēlir chieftains, 29–30; Ādu kōṭpāṭṭu died in it, 31; interest of the battle of, 31 f.
Vicci, defeated by Iḷam Cēral Irumporai, 45.
Vidyārānya, 94.
Vīlankil, victory of Yānaikaṭṣey at, 63.
Viśākham Tirunāl Mahārāja, 87 n.
Viyalūr—a stronghold of Nannan destroyed by Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, 23.
Yēnai Kaṭṣey Māntaram Cēral Irumporai, came sometime after Iḷam-Cēral Irumporai; not the son of Šen-Kuṭṭuvan, 62; his wars, conquests and reverses, 63 f; his reverse described by Kūrumkōliyūr Kilār, 64—65; sung about by Ṣam Kīranār, 66; Ainkurunūru collected at his instance, 66; perhaps the hero of the missing 10th Patirrup-pattu, 66; Cēra power began to wane after him, 67; ruled at Toṇḍi, 69; a contemporary, Rājasūyam vēṭṭa Perunarkilī, 70.

Yavanas, discussion about, 13; punishment of by Imayavaramban, 13; their calling at the port of Muṣiri, 23, 26.

Yule, 29.